In anticipation of drastic cuts in local aid, school superintendents across the state are proposing changes to the school systems that might help save money.

At the last school committee meeting, Supt. Edward Malvey announced a list of requests the Massachusetts Superintendents' Association was presenting to the state and the Department of Education.

Malvey said the superintendents were asking the state to:

- reduce the number of reports required from schools, eliminating paperwork
- freeze tuition hikes at private special education schools
- end the ability for teachers to have schools pay for re-certification, which is mandatory every five years
- allow more health care providers to trim the cost of health care
- suspend charter schools
- reduce audit processes
- drop the requirement on providing transportation to grades K-6, or allow schools to charge fees for that transportation
- postpone MCAS testing by 1 to 2 years
- allow schools to keep money they don't spend in their budget instead of returning it to towns' general funds

Grant awarded for water flow study

The Water Commission has been awarded a $5,000 grant from the state Riverways Program to help pay for a hydrological assessment of the flow of water in the watershed of Lily Pond and the Aaron River Reservoir.

"This grant will help us to better manage our water resources so they can continue to meet the demands of Cohasset residents for drinking water now and in the future," said John McNabb, chairman of the Water Commission. "This study will help us to make sure that our use of our water resources is sustainable for the current demand and for any future increases in demand for drinking water."

To collect the necessary data for the hydrologic assessment, said McNabb, the Commission will install five gauging stations in the watershed where streamflow measurements will be made over the next year. Measurements will be taken of water flow at each of these locations to accurately measure flow into Lily Pond from tributaries and out of the Aaron River Reservoir into Lily Pond and Bound Brook.

This project implements two tasks recommended in the Commission's recently completed "Surface Water Supply Protection Plan." Total project cost is $20,590.

Do you have a legal question or are you confused about a legal issue? The Bar Association of Norfolk County is sponsoring free legal clinics as a public service to the community. President's Day blizzard is one for the record books

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

It isn't often that traveling at 20 miles per hour feels just about right and the motorists behind you agree.

But for those who ventured out during the President's Day blizzard this week, a slow crawl was the best way to avoid ending up in a snow bank.

Kids in families that hadn't snuck off to warmer climes over the weekend loved the six-foot drifts, as snow forts were the order of the day. Youngsters didn't complain even thought they were already out of school due to February vacation so they didn't get an official "snow day." However, most town employees —save the DPW crew, police and fire — did get an extra day off, as local Town Halls remained closed Tuesday. The storm even kept letter carriers from delivering the mail.

DPW crews worked around the clock from the beginning of the storm Monday well into Tuesday night.

Crews got an early start the next day hauling out huge mounds of snow out and clearing the ends of roads to improve visibility. Because of the severity of the storm, there were a number of equipment breakdowns.

This latest storm puts the snow removal budget another $20,000 to $30,000 more further in the red, which means the deficit so far this year is about $60,000, according to Town Manager Mark Haddad.

Haddad said the budget for snow removal is $60,000, an amount the town usually over expends every other year.

"It was a long night," said DPW employee Kenny Thayer. "It was a hard storm to plow because of the drifting snow and the whiteout because of the wind. Every time you plowed a road, you'd have to come back a couple of hours later and do it all over again."

"Every time you plowed a road, you'd have to come back a couple of hours later and do it all over again."
— Kenny Thayer of the DPW

At the height of the storm, conventional methods of plowing were thrown out the window.

"The snow was just so intense we had to use loaders in a lot of cases just so we could get the small plows in there," said Thayer.

The town's nine DPW employees worked a 24-hour shift on Monday, stopping only for coffee breaks. "If we stopped plowing, we'd go do sanding or snow removal," said Thayer.

The top priority was clearing the streets for commuters, school parking lots, and sidewalks to avoid people having to walk in the street. By Tuesday evening, some of the streets were bare.

"Like I said, you gotta praise the guys. They all worked hard right through," said Thayer.

Haddad called for a snow emergency shortly after noon on Monday, but police dispatcher Tom Wigmore said no cars were towed. "Everybody was good. They stayed off the roads," he said.

Wigmore said four small accidents resulted from the blizzard. One Cohasset motorist was treated and released from South Shore Hospital after suffering minor injuries when his car hit a telephone pole.

On Wednesday, DPW crews were getting ready to truck snow out of Cohasset Village. "They're starting at around 4 or 4:30 and will probably go until around 12," said Thayer.

In one of the snowiest, coldest winters in recent memory — folks didn't flood the hardware stores for snow blowers, because they're used to Old Man Winter by now. After all, when he was considerably younger way back in November, he dropped the first snowflakes on our region.

With many residents claiming to have seen robins, a sure harbinger of spring — Tina Watson of Cohasset Hardware reported birdseed is selling well, like...hotcakes, if you'll excuse the reference to "warmth."

Watson said the last shovel in the store had been sold by Wednesday afternoon, and only a few bags of rock salt were remaining.

A brave few suffering from cabin fever ventured out to local shops in the village on Tuesday, only to return home to hunker down until sunshine and 40s promised for the end of the week make the storm just another winter memory.

Mariner weather observer Bob Skilling says Monday's storm was the fourth biggest in 50 years and buried us with nearly 22 inches in 19 hours.

But it was business as usual for Hingham Bay's Hornstra Farms, which made deliveries to regular customers during the height of the storm.

Many were surprised to find the breakfast items they had ordered – milk, eggs, and orange juice – on their doorsteps even as heavy snow continued to fall, making driving difficult.

"I don't ever remember us missing a delivery due to weather, including during the Blizzard of '78," said John Hornstra, who recalls delivering milk to customers on a toboggan with his father, Jack.

The Hornstras received numerous calls from pleased customers expressing gratitude that their orders had been filled in such a timely fashion, despite the weather.

Many years ago, Hornstra's grandfather would load a "pung" (horse-drawn sleigh) with milk when the streets hadn't been cleared yet.

"We take our job seriously," said Hornstra. "If our customers are waiting for milk, we'll get it to them."

John Camera and Carol Meyer also contributed to this report.

Selectman's race tops spring ballot

Ronnie McMorris in the last election, said this year's campaign would not be too different than the last. "I'm going to do what I did the last time. I'm just going to dig harder," he said. "It's the same as it was last year. People in the town are still not happy."

Hill criticized the Board of Selectmen for not being more prepared to handle an economic downturn. "You've got to look a little bit farther ahead than the Selectmen," he said. "They're spending money that they don't have."

Hill's strongpoint is his connection with other residents. "I've lived here a long time and I feel I have a very strong tie with the people here," said the Cohasset native. "I feel that knowing the issues are very important, but I also feel that knowing the people is very important. And I feel the Selectmen have lost touch with that."

Gomez, although not quite as critical of the Selectmen as Hill, is approaching the race in a similar fashion, saying a fresh perspective is needed on the Board.

"These are tough times and they're going to require tough decisions," he said. "It's going to require a person that isn't going to just come up with 'vanilla' solutions — solutions that may have worked in the past. It's going to take someone who's going to think outside-the-box and be able to effectively communicate ideas with the other Selectmen."

Gomez said his military experience as a pilot and SEAL commander in the Navy and his business experience at Harvard Business School and in the financial world have honed his leadership skills and taught him "how to operate effectively within diverse teams."

"I'm young and I've got a passion for the job. This is what I want to do," he said.

As far as his campaign is concerned, Gomez said he has already named a campaign manager, Patrick Waters of Aaron River Road, and also formed an executive committee and a regular campaign committee.

Having moved to Cohasset two years ago, Gomez went door-to-door and collected about 150 more signatures than the 50 required for nomination papers, an exercise he says introduced him to many residents' concerns and also produced a large base of volunteers.

He said his supporters include both new residents and people who have lived in Cohasset all their lives. "I feel like I've got some of the smartest people in town working for me," he said.

Hill voiced concerns that voter turnout at the April 5 election would be low. "I would really like it if a lot of people got out and voted," he said. "It's an important part of the process. People need to get out and voice their opinions."

Tinory produces ballad about St. John tragedy me," says Tinory, who keeps a legal pad on the nightstand by his bed. "I wrote the lyrics in five minutes and put the song to music the next morning." The result is an ethereal ballad that is both uplifting and patriotic despite the tragic outcome.

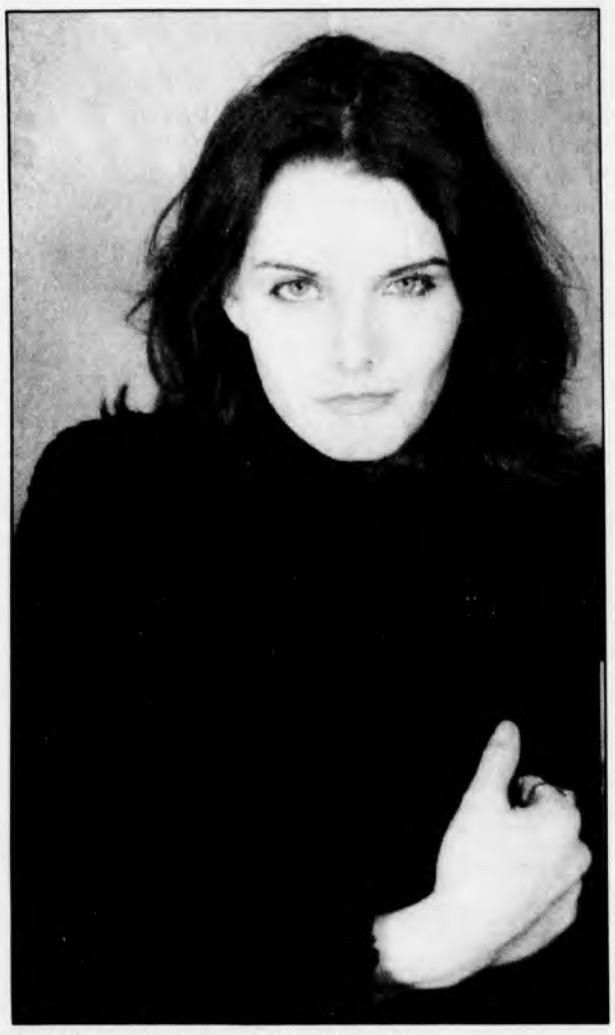
Tinory contacted Stacy Rock, who is working as an actress in New York City, and asked her to come to Cohasset to record the song. Rock, who is classically trained, plays the piano on the recording and Tinory added the other arrangements including a blast of French horns as the song opens.



Stacy Rock, who sings "Mother of Ireland."

"I wanted it to be very dark, very warm, very much like a tragedy," he recalls.

Locally, the song was featured recently on WATD's Shamus Mulligan show that features Irish music. Kathy Dee, also on WATD that is based in Marshfield, is playing the record, as is Sean Casey on WPLM in Plymouth.

Tinory also knows that timing is important in the creative industry, whether you're a novelist, TV or movie producer or a songwriter.

With St. Patrick's Day around the corner, and Martin Scorcsese's film about poor Irish immigrants in the mid-1800s in "The Gangs of New York" garnering 10 academy award nominations — a true story about Irish citizens fleeing the potato famine may get more than just a passing interest.

To obtain a copy of the CD, contact Tinory at 781-383-9494.

"Mother of Ireland"
Words and Music
by Rik Tinory

Mother of Ireland, Gave Birth to a land, Across the deep waters
A boat drifts to sand, Striking the ledges
Off Cohasset shore, She lies on a beach according to lore
(Chorus)
Mother of Ireland, Breathes life to the air
The wind from the Marshlands, blowing her hair
Weeping with joy, giving birth to a land
Far from the shores of old
Ireland

The Brig St. John, Sailed from Galway Bay
Striking the ledge, one
October day
Forty five people, of ninety nine
Their bodies lay lost, but not in kind

They came in great numbers,
No fear in their hearts
To build this great country,
Although set apart
They fought and were scorned, But it didn't deter
They knew in their souls it was all for her
(Repeat Chorus)

"This cross was erected and dedicated May 30, 1914, by the A.O.H. and the I.A.A.O.H. of Massachusetts to mark the final resting place of about forty-five Irish immigrants from a total company of ninety-nine who lost their lives on Grampus Ledge off Cohasset October 7, 1849, in the wreck of the brig St. John from Galway, Ireland. What are the worst things about the massive jet traffic planned for the South Shore?

Harm to health:

Jet fuel combustion products are toxic. Calculation for Cohasset alone: the equivalent of a semi tanker truck of kerosene set on fire in the Town Green every day of the year, with 39 left over for New Year's Eve.

Poor quality of life:

Hull High School already gets jets closer to classrooms than any jet gets to Logan Control Tower. That size impact will spread over Cohasset, Hingham & Hull. So will the areas defined by the FAA as too noise polluted for residential use. Not much value in preserving our open space.

Economic loss:

Individual property value is not the biggest loss of wealth. The value of the South Shore as a high quality residential region will be wiped out.

Help us protect your home and health. Donate generously to the SSJPC.

The issues:

Current: Logan Airport has shifted existing traffic from other areas onto Cohasset, Hingham & Hull.

Future: Massport's controversial runway expansion would reconfigure airport traffic. Most traffic would fly low over South Shore neighborhoods.

SSJPC aims:

Current: Minimize the impacts of existing traffic by re-routing it away from all communities.

Future: Oppose the expansion plan and push for political action toward smart planning. Make sure elected officials hear: we need to keep our historically clean air.

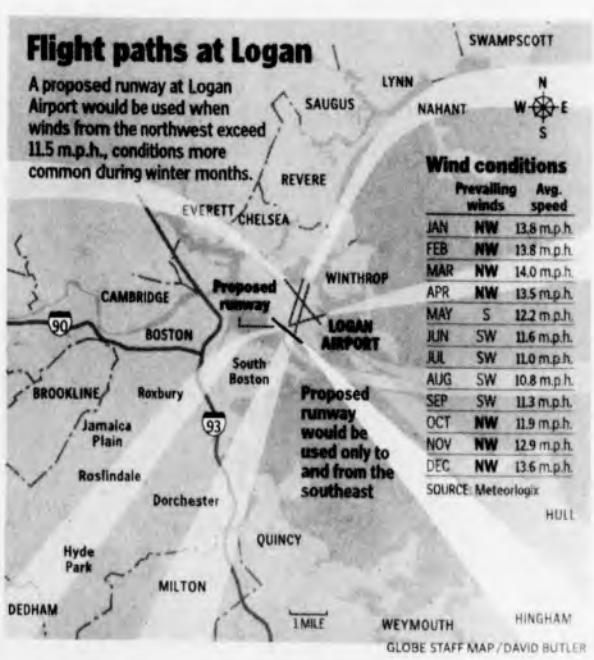
What should our elected officials do?

The new governor should do the math, stop runway 14/32 and save the South Shore. Public health is wealth. This splendid coastal region with prime quality of life is wealth. The $100 million in federal funds Massport may be able to get for runway expansion = about 200 median price South Shore homes, all of which would be blighted by 14/32.

Does Massport know what is best for Massachusetts?

No!

The Governor's post 9/11 Special Advisory Task Force on Massport calls Massport a four-headed monster of patronage. That monster is intent on spreading its filth over our homes. Please join the fight!



Boston Globe map, page 1, June 22, 2002, showing all traffic to and from proposed runway 14/32 – low altidude arrivals & departures on their initial climb – streaming over the South Shore towns.

Veterans' groups seek names of local troops in Middle East

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Police Chief Robert Jackson has been doing a little extra homework lately.

As a member of the American Legion, Jackson has been trying to track down any Cohasset natives in the Armed Services who may have been deployed to the Middle East.

The American Legion and the Sons of the American Legion are looking for the information in anticipation of a possible war with Iraq. During the Gulf War, the two organizations sent packages to troops based in the region.

Although he does not yet know if any Cohasset residents have been called to the Middle East, Jackson has found the names of 12 people in active duty and is contacting their families to find out where they are stationed.

"We don't know if they're over there, stateside or what," said Steve Wigmore, commander of the Cohasset American Legion Post. "There could plenty more, we don't know. We're looking all the time to find out and asking questions."

"It's a great feeling when you get something sent to you from home."
— Steve Wigmore, Commander of George H. Mealy Post 118

Wigmore said packages sent to troops would contain simple items like cigarettes, peanuts, gum, candy and toiletries. "Just to let them know we're behind them all the time," he said.

A veteran of the Korean War, Wigmore knows how a package can brighten a troop's day. "It's a great feeling when you get something sent to you from home," he said.

A possible war with Iraq has been on the minds of many veterans who gather at the American Legion Post in Cohasset, which has about 300 members. "We think about it. There's not much ever said. There's a group of us that come here every day. We'll watch the four o'clock news," Wigmore said.

Wigmore's son, Tom, who is the commander of the Sons of the American Legion, has been working with Jackson in his search. He said the Sons sent Monopoly board games to more than 10 Cohasset residents who served in the Gulf War. In the event of another conflict in that region, they are prepared to offer whatever support they can to the troops and their families. "Anything we can do to help the families, we'll be more than happy to do that," he said.

The Legion and the Sons are also ready reinstate the Blue Star Banner Program, whereby a blue star is displayed in the window of a home to signal that a son or daughter is serving in the war. The Legion has a dozen blue stars on order.

"You used to ride around and see them all over the place years ago," said Steve Wigmore.

Cohasset has seen residents serve in every war in the nation's history, but has also mourned the loss of many who did not return. Five residents were killed in World War I, eight in World War II, one in Korea and eight in Vietnam.

Of the Cohasset natives that are now in active duty, six are in the Marine Corps, four are in the Navy, and two are in the Army.

To notify the American Legion of a family member in the Armed Services, contact Tom Wigmore at 781-383-9657.

CMI to launch spring benefit gala

Mark your calendars for 7:30 p.m. on March 28 for the annual Cohasset Maritime Institute(CMI) fundraiser at Bancroft Hall. Also know as the "The Spring Launch Fundraiser", the party last year brought together more than 100 partygoers, who raised more than $5000.

This year brings special significance as it represents the tenth year the rowing club has made its strong presence felt in Cohasset Harbor. Founded by a small group of rowing and maritime education enthusiasts, CMI now boasts a vibrant program and a growing membership. (For those unfamiliar with CMI, it sponsors rowing and maritime programs for middle-high school students and adults.)

Lynne Layman, Lisa Hewitt Dick, and Sharon Daly, spearhead this year's fundraiser planning. According to Layman, "The town buzzed last year about how so many townspeople loved the party and wanted to repeat the experience. We expect a second round of great times this year." Layman said this year the party will once again include the musical talents of Mat Brown, a silent auction, great food, and wonderful friendships.

When asked how CMI will deploy proceeds from the upcoming "Spring Launch," founder Jack Buckley said, "Annual membership fees cover most of the operating expenses like staffing. But we need to build up our reserves for large ticket capital items like boat replacements and building upkeep."

"We have tremendous momentum to our membership. We want to deliver a top notch experience for our students and adult rowers," he said.

To further energize the silent auction, CMI has asked interested individuals and businesses to donate items or services such as gift certificates, gourmet baskets, home-cooked meals, artwork, services for pets, boat rides, vacation home stays and any other appealing ideas of a whimsical or practical nature. Deadline for delivery of silent auction items is March 16.

Please call Layman at 545-0096(or email at Laymanphoto@attbi.com) or Lisa Hewitt Dick at 383-0204(or email at Lmhewitt@attbi.com) before March 21 if you wish to purchase tickets at $25 per person. $35. at the door. Seating is limited! Checks should be mailed to CMI c/o P.O. Box 131, Cohasset , MA. 02025 .Please mark your check clearly "Spring Launch" and the number of tickets requested.

School Board opts to wait and see

Wants a look at Governor's budget

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Rumors of cuts in local aid that are more than double what the town has budgeted for in fiscal year 2004 have left the School Committee paralyzed in its attempts to finalize its own budget.

At its meeting last Thursday, the School Committee approved a 4 percent budget increase for the coming fiscal year, but whether that increase is even possible will depend on Governor Romney's budget plan for the state, set to be revealed Feb. 26.

Town Manager Mark Haddad had asked the School Committee to accept a 4 percent increase contingent upon an expected 10 percent cut in local aid and a proposed $485,000 general override. But after talking with Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, Haddad told selectmen last Tuesday that a 20 percent cut in local aid was more likely. And it would come on top of a 2.5 percent cut in local aid already assessed in the current fiscal year.

School Committee member Mark DeGiacomo said the new figures would mean the schools would need to chop another $180,000 from their budget.

"We're like driving blind in a snowstorm because you don't know where it's going to end."
— Rick Flynn

"We're like driving blind in a snowstorm because you don't know where it's going to end," said committee chairman Rick Flynn. "If there's a 20 percent cut, then we go back to the drawing board."

The School Committee still needs to cut $75,000 from its current budget plan to fit within a 4 percent budget increase, but members were hesitant to make any decisions on the matter with so much uncertainty surrounding cuts in local aid.

"I think we're spinning our wheels if we try to cut anything now," said member Jane Pescatore. "If we have to make more cuts, it could take us in a different direction."

In balancing the budget so far, the committee has agreed to eliminate one teaching position thorough attrition, as well as layoff two health teachers, an adjustment councilor and a special education teacher.

The layoffs are necessary due to new costs in next year's school budget, the most significant of which are $420,000 for salary increases and more than $200,000 for special education. Committee members said more layoffs would be hard to avoid in the face of a 20 percent cut in local aid.

Selectman Tom Callahan has asked that all town employees forgo their raises in fiscal year 2004 so the town can avoid layoffs, an idea that Flynn said is worth considering. "Inflation is not 3.5 percent. Inflation is more like zero percent," he said, suggesting the raises are not as necessary in a struggling economy.

The committee discussed several other areas where money might be saved, among them eliminating administrative raises (which are not union-negotiated), not hiring new teachers for three positions being vacated by retirements, and bringing the school's lunch program "in-house" instead of contracting it to a private company.

Consolidating to one principal between Osgood and Deer Hill School was also mentioned as a possibility, a move that Flynn said would result in a "difficult…if not chaotic" situation.

Supt. Ed Malvey said he was working closely with other school officials to determine where additional cuts would be most easily absorbed. He said he may suggest some cuts that school administrators would not agree with but did not elaborate on what specific areas he would target.

The School Committee will meet with the Advisory Committee and the Board of Selectmen on Feb. 27 after Gov. Romney's budget is announced. Any additional cuts would need to be finalized between then March 25, when the committee will present its budget at Town Meeting.

Permits, land and turtles all stall Greenbush construction

David W. Ryan, assistant MBTA general manager for Design and Construction, says current projections for the resolution of outstanding issues do not support the approved Greenbush construction schedule. The MBTA's contractor Cashman/Balfour Beatty (CBB) planned significant mobilization by March 1, 2003 in order to substantially complete the track, signal and communications work no later than Dec. 31, 2004 with a start up date for service of June 2005.

- The MBTA, therefore, has taken the following actions:
- CBB will conclude any current construction activities on the project
- CBB will not to start any new construction activities until further notice
- CBB will revise the project schedule to extend the date for substantial completion of the track, signals and communication work from Dec. 31, 2004 to June 30, 2005.
- CBB and the MBTA will continue design and permitting efforts on the project.

"I am very concerned with the potential that CBB would mobilize and would be forced to demobilize or incur stand-by costs due to the failure of one or more of these issues to be resolved in a timely manner."

— David W. Ryan, assistant MBTA general manager for Design and Construction

Outstanding issues include:

- Access to the CSX right-of-way in Braintree: CSX Corporation, a train freight company, owns the first 1.4 miles of track in Braintree. The MBTA, which will make the necessary track upgrades, has offered to pay CSX $70,000 annually for access to the right-of-way; CSX wants $580,000 annually. Negotiations are ongoing.
- Wetlands permits: Variances are needed from the state Department of Environmental Protection for Hingham, Cohasset and Scituate because part of the work will exceed guidelines in the Massachusetts Wetlands Protection Act. The variance for Hingham has been obtained, but the decision was appealed by the Hingham Board of Selectmen, Hingham Conservation Commission and Hingham-based AfTA [Advocates for Transportation Alternatives], an anti-Greenbush group.
- Weymouth Landing Design: Town of Weymouth officials have indicated they will not sign off on the final design details until the Section 106 [historic preservation] permitting process for the area is complete, which is not expected until June 2003. According to the schedule, that work was to begin in March.
- Spotted turtle mitigation: 42 crossing structures specifically designed to encourage turtle use have been incorporated into the project. The DEP has required, as a condition of the Hingham variance, that a demonstration crossing project be constructed in Hingham and monitored this spring to see if the turtles will use the crossings to get to wetlands habitat on both sides of the right of way. While the demonstration project is complete and monitoring for turtle use will begin in March, it is not clear how the schedule would be affected if monitoring is not successful and additional turtle mitigation is required.

"The financial exposure in proceeding with construction at this time without the CSX issues resolved, and the permitting process appeal process completed is significant," Ryan stated in his Feb. 11 memo on the Greenbush project. "In particular, I am very concerned with the potential that CBB would mobilize and would be forced to demobilize or incur stand-by costs due to the failure of one or more of these issues to be resolved in a timely manner." Ryan cited as an example, the standby costs for a "slurry wall" contractor could be $50,000 a week, with a $200,000 cost for demobilization and mobilization. [Slurry walls is technology that can be used for tunnels and retaining walls.]

1849 — Service on the Old Colony line begins

1959 — Passenger service on the Old Colony lines stops; Southeast Expressway opens

1971 — Red Lion extends to Quincy, delaying talk of restoring the Old Colony Lines

1984 — Traffic congestion in the region prompts the state Legislature, with the support of then Gov. Michael Dukakis, to direct the MBTA to study the feasibility of restoring the Old Colony lines to Plymouth, Middleboro and Greenbush

1988 — Due to the complexity of the project, the Greenbush feasibility study is split from the Plymouth and Middleboro lines

1991 — At the ballot box, Hingham is the only town along the Greenbush corridor to vote against the train.

1994 — The Citizens Advisory Committee, appointed by the Secretary of Environmental Affairs to comment on Greenbush feasibility studies, votes to support the train with a short tunnel under Hingham Square.

1996 —The MBTA decides to pay for Greenbush using only state dollars; the Town of Hingham launches a lawsuit saying the MBTA is deliberately trying to skirt tougher federal environmental laws

Sept. 1997 — The Plymouth and Middleboro lines open to much fanfare

1999 — the MBTA says a short tunnel under Hingham Square is feasible and would cost $29 million.

March 2000 — Scituate voters approve spending up to $50,000 for any legal action against the MBTA over the Greenbush rail restoration project.

May 2000 — Hingham signs a mitigation agreement with the MBTA and agrees to drop its lawsuit; is promised a short tunnel under Hingham Square at a cost of $39 million and a $1.35 million preservation fund to protect historic properties.

March 2001 – MBTA decides to use the "design-build" method for Greenbush, where the contractor, designs, builds and pays for the project with the MBTA then paying the contractor back over 20 years. The "design-build" method has only been used once before, for the Route 3 North widening project.

Delay could derail Scituate CPA funding

By Amy Lambiaso
ALAMBIAS@CNC.COM

It is a project that has divided Scituate residents for years. And while rail opponents are rejoicing this week at the news the Greenbush restoration has been delayed six months, town officials are wondering when or if Scituate will get the $10.4 million in funds promised in the mitigation agreement inked with the T.

Last week, the MBTA halted all construction work on the 17.7-mile commuter rail line running from Scituate to Boston due to permitting problems and wetlands issues that could plague the project down the line. The design process and permitting is still moving forward, but for all intents and purposes, the project is on hold, said the town's MBTA liaison Susan Phippen.

"We're really at a crossroads right now," said Phippen. "We really don't know what this is going to mean and we won't for a while."

Phippen said several of the Army Corps of Engineers permits dealing with historical resources, wetland-designated areas and issues with the Clean Water Act are at the forefront for delays involving Scituate, while larger issues with contractors in Braintree are causing some uneasiness with project.

Scituate signed its $10.4 mitigation deal with the MBTA in March and construction was slated to begin in Scituate next month. After the preliminary brush clearing along the track lines taking place last fall, the biggest step was to be the demolition of the Stockbridge Road bridge scheduled for March 1. But without the necessary permits, such a move would not make sense, Phippen said.

Scituate officials are more concerned with how, when and if the mitigation money will come through, and what it will mean for other projects dependent on that money. The MBTA issued its Intent to Proceed Construction to the town Jan. 10, meaning payments for the mitigation money would begin in 60 days, or March 10. But with the project's delay, officials say they must now wait and see.

"The town is arguing that some mitigation money is due to us," Phippen said. "We have proceeded in good faith with measures to ensure we would receive some money by March 10 and I'm optimistic that part of it will come through."

Without the Greenbush mitigation money, proposals for the Community Preservation Act funding must be reconsidered entirely, said Phippen, who also serves as chairman for the CPA committee. Included within the MBTA deal is $3 million allotted for open space acquisitions, $490,000 for recreation and $1 million for historic resources — all areas with project considerations through the CPA as well.

"Without the MBTA money we'll certainly have to re-evaluate the CPA proposals," Selectmen Chairman Joseph Norton said. "We'll either have to postpone the CPA plan altogether or at least part of the plan."

Selectmen asked to reconsider the ballfield complex plan for the Cushing Elementary School last week since the plan included funding from both the mitigation deal and the CPA fund. Phippen suggested that such reconsideration would have to be given to open space acquisitions and historical projects as well if there was to be no Greenbush mitigation money.

Some North Scituate residents are hoping that may just be the case. Gannett Road resident Gilman Wilder said he and many of his neighbors are delighted with the decision to delay the project and hopes it is a sign the train may not come at all.

"I've been hoping Romney would put a thumb on it and hopefully he still will," Wilder said. "I'm overjoyed (with the news) I've had no love for the project for the last 20 years anyway."

Cohasset projects may be in limbo poor road conditions from the blizzard.

Haddad said he was working to schedule another meeting as soon as possible so he could find out the details of the delay.

In May of 2001, Cohasset became the second Greenbush town, behind Hingham, to agree to mitigation. In the agreement, the MBTA pledged to contribute $1.2 million for the completion of the James Brook flood control project, $500,000 for the reconstruction of the town parking lot, $250,000 for the replacement of Sohier Street wells, and additional funds for the construction of a sidewalk on North Main Street from King Street to the proposed station entrance.

Designs for the James Brook and town parking lot were nearing completion and the projects were scheduled to go to bid by mid-March. Craig Miller, president of the Waterfield Design Group, which is handling the designs, said he had received no word from the MBTA about whether designs should be halted or the bidding delayed.

Designs for James Brook and town parking lot were nearing completion and the projects were scheduled to go to bid by mid-March.

Waterfield is also in charge of designs for the village streetscape revitalization project, which is not funded by the MBTA, but paid for by a Public Works Economic Development grant from the state that the MBTA endorsed. Miller said a potential snag could result if the streetscape project was scheduled to be completed before repairs could be made on a culvert for James Brook that crosses under South Main Street.

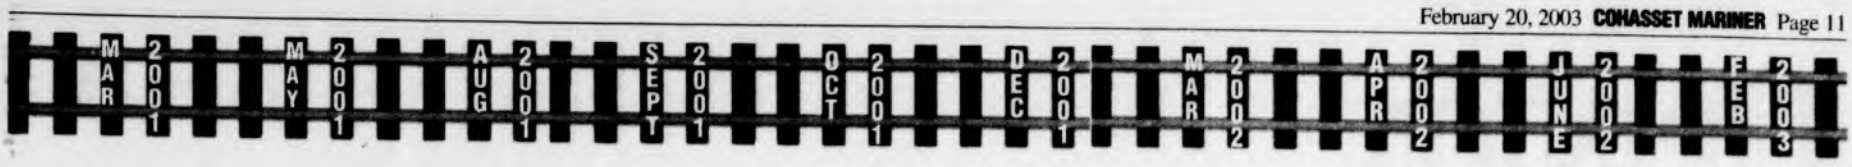
Delaying work on the town parking lot could also prove inconvenient because the project was originally intended to be completed before any streetscape construction on South Main Street began so parking would remain available throughout the summer.

John McNabb, chairman of the Water Commission, said preliminary construction on the Sohier Street well project was also nearing.

McNabb said permits had been acquired and designs for test wells were completed. He said the test well portion of the project was ready to go to bid, but only if the MBTA could guarantee reimbursement.

The MBTA gave written authorization in August that it would reimburse the town up to $250,000 for the well project. McNabb said $9,500 had been spent so far, but receipts had not yet been submitted.

Patterson, the Greenbush town ombudsman, said she did not know if her position as ombudsman would be eliminated or suspended since it is funded by the mitigation package.



Greenbush timeline

Square is OK with the delay

Army Corps hearing cited as a key reason

Word that Greenbush construction will be halted for at least six months spread quickly in Hingham Square, where preparatory work for the $40 million tunnel was underway.

Some merchants considered the announcement good news. Those residents waiting to use the restored service reconciled themselves to further delay.

"I got a lot of hugs when I went around telling the merchants," said Hingham Greenbush Coordinator Alexander Macmillan.

But Patti Libby, whose Square Café on North Street abuts the tracks, had mixed reactions.

"I think everybody was ready for the project to start. We were thinking, Okay, it's here. Let's deal with the reality that the train is coming and develop a good relationship with the construction people," she said, noting that a member of the construction team shoveled her walkway on a snowy day. "In the end, I was starting to think the construction wouldn't be as bad as I thought. Now it's just delaying the inevitable."

Susan Achille, who manages the Bowl & Board with her husband, Carl, was thrilled when Macmillan shared the news with them.

"It's fantastic. I can't tell you how happy we are," she said. "I know it doesn't mean it's the end of the project, but it's another delay, and as long as we can keep the delays coming, we'll take them however we can get them. Then we'll see what happens. In the meantime, we're very happy about the whole thing."

The decision came amid rising speculation that Governor Mitt Romney might nix the project as part of his cost-cutting measures.

"To the surprise of almost no one, the costs are on the verge of escalating well beyond even the most current estimates," Macmillan said. "The MBTA can see the handwriting on the wall. I speculate the (transit authority) probably has marching orders from the Governor not to ask for another nickel."

Selectman Melissa Tully considers the decision a "very wise" one on the part of the MBTA.

"There are a number of important unresolved issues, such as permitting and the ultimate cost, and it's important to nail those down before the project moves forward," she said. "The MBTA is showing responsibility to Massachusetts taxpayers because there's no stronghold yet on the total cost."

In the meantime, efforts to complete an archaeological dig in search for any historic artifacts that might be unearthed along the rail bed will continue, work that is expected to last two to three weeks.

"I got a lot of hugs when I went around telling them about the delay."

— Hingham Greenbush Coordinator Alexander Macmillan.

Macmillan also believes the "straw that broke the camel's back" is that the towns came out "with all bells blazing" at a recent Army Corps of Engineers (ACE) hearing about the need for four-quadrant gates and other issues.

"Without waiting for the current comment period to expire, the ACE and others involved in the 106 historic review process decided that further consultation would be necessary and that there would be another public hearing tentatively scheduled for April 15," said Macmillan.

Four-quadrant gates block both lanes in each direction at grade crossings, while two-quadrant gates block only the right lanes and are often combined with median barriers to prevent motorists from cutting around the gate.

The ACE, the lead federal agency involved with the project, must grant various permits before rail restoration can move forward. For example, Section 106 of the National Historic Preservation Act governs mitigation measures for historic properties and archaeological resources.

Historic and permitting issues will be discussed at the tentatively scheduled April Corps meeting, which makes the March 1 previously expected start-up date for actual construction unrealistic.

"A comment period will follow, which brings the project into May at a minimum," Macmillan said. "I suspected that the MBTA's idea that it would get all the required permits so they could start digging up the Square this summer wasn't feasible."

Another cause for delay is that Town Brook can't be relocated before the project is permitted.

"They can't build the tunnel under Hingham Square until that happens," Macmillan said. "This really delays the whole thing. There'll be a lot of speculation (in the next several months)."

Tracking the high cost of Greenbush rail restoration

daily in-bound riders, opponents claim alternatives, such as expanded bus and commuter boat service, would be much cheaper, just as efficient, and more environmentally friendly.

But today with a new administration in place on Beacon Hill and a state fiscal crisis showing no signs of abating, the cost of building and operating Greenbush is taking center stage.

"They are not saying the project is dead, but they do have serious, legitimate questions about whether the MBTA can afford the project."

— state Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth

"They are not saying the project is dead," says state Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, about the Romney administration. "But they do have serious, legitimate questions about whether the MBTA can afford the project."

Even questions about Greenbush's affordability are not new, but what has changed is the state's fiscal crisis.

Hedlund points to three separate studies — from the Massachusetts Taxpayers Foundation, the Pioneer Institute for Public Policy and the MBTA's own Blue Ribbon Commission — that have questioned the MBTA's ability to build, maintain and operate Greenbush, along with its other commuter trains and T service without seeking more money from the state's general fund.

Under the so-called "forward funding" plan passed by the Legislature in 1999, the MBTA is no longer supposed to simply submit bills to state at the end of the year, but has to prepare a budget and live within it. The MBTA is now funded through fares, assessments on user communities and 20 percent of the revenues from the sales tax.

"The reason these concerns weren't heeded in the past, is the MBTA thought it could raid the general fund," said Hedlund. "They are not in a position to do this now."

But one of the Greenbush project's major proponents, Rep. Frank Hynes, D-Marshfield, suggests the project's financing has already been worked out to stretch through the next 20 to 25 years and is accounted for through the fiscal year 2008 capital budget. To abandon the project at this stage in the game would be "penny-wise and pound foolish."

"I'm not pessimistic at all right now," Hynes said. "Capital expenditures are not something to be taken lightly, but the alternatives to Greenbush are not adequate to accomplish what we have set out to do."

Hynes speaks to the goal of Greenbush creating an alternative means of transportation for coastal residents to commute and travel to the metro area. With rising gasoline prices, population increases and growing business districts on the South Shore, Hynes said the restoration of the Greenbush line will be the "lifeline for the coastal area and Boston."

"People are becoming more aware of the need for an alternative means of transportation," he said. "(A commuter train) is something that is enjoyed by every region around Boston except the coastal area."

Half the story

But John Bewick of Hingham, who is president of the anti-Greenbush group, AfTA (Advocates for Transportation Alternatives), says the construction cost are only half the story.

"We are thrilled at the news Secretary Grabauskas and the MBTA have put a six-months hold on Greenbush construction," said Bewick, who is a former state Secretary of Environmental Affairs. "It means the Romney administration is taking a hard look at the costs of this project. As the Mass. Taxpayers Foundation pointed out last year, the MBTA cannot fund adequate maintenance and still fund an exorbitantly expensive project like Greenbush at a time when declines in fare revenues are putting enormous pressure on the MBTA to pay for current expenses and projects."

Not thrilled with the construction delay is the South Shore Chamber of Commerce, which is determined to see that Greenbush becomes a reality.

"No one has ever said that Greenbush is not needed," says Chamber president and CEO Ron Zooleck. "We're not saving money by delaying it. Those, like Mr. Bewick, who argue it costs too much have been delaying it for 15 years, almost doubling the cost."

Zooleck, who says the Chamber will help "educate" the new administration about Greenbush as the organization has done with the four previous governors, says train service is critical to the area. If the popular Middleboro and Plymouth lines are a gauge, Greenbush will attract more riders than estimated, he says.

"Not one of the opponents has ever stood up and said, 'We don't need Greenbush,'" Zooleck says. "Just go out and look at Route 3, and the answer is not recreating Dunkirk everyday with a flotilla of boats from Hingham to Boston."

Statehouse observers say the politics of Greenbush may have shifted since its main cheerleader: former state representative Joseph Sullivan of Braintree, who continues to back the project, left the Statehouse to head the state Lottery Commission. Sullivan was chairman of the powerful House Committee on Transportation.

"This is a bit of a timeout," Sullivan said this week. "But I expect Greenbush will be built and the commitments that have been made will be kept. I expect instead of the spring of 2005 for full service, it will be the fall of 2005. I believe in this project.

"We prioritized it when I was in the Legislature, and I'm not going to easily walk away from it."

But Sullivan's departure gives Sen. Hedlund's like-minded counterpart across the hall, state Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, more anti-Greenbush clout.

Bradley — who plans to file an amendment to the upcoming state budget asking to kill the project, or if the project flies making four-quadrant gates mandatory — welcomes a Greenbush financial review. [Four-quadrant gates would eliminate the need for median strips at grade crossings].

"We have to have some hard numbers," Bradley said. "A cost-benefit analysis needs to be applied to Greenbush before more money is put into it."

Partial suspension

Jon Carlisle, spokesman for state Transportation Secretary Daniel Grabauskas' office, said the MBTA called a six-month moratorium to resolve all permitting and mitigation issues prior to actual construction to avoid escalating costs.

"We don't want to send contractors into the field, then have to call them back," he said, adding the delay would also reduce the need to change design plans and construction documents.

Dale Pyatt, president and chairman of the board of Jay Cashman Inc., declined to speak about the politics of the project.

"We just design and build them," he said. However, Pyatt did say its contract with Cashman gives the MBTA the right to terminate or suspend work, and described recent events as a "partial suspension."

"It was probably a prudent budget decision on the MBTA's part," he said about the six months' delay.

Pyatt said the Weymouth office in Jackson Square would remain open and CBB would continue to work on design and preparatory work. An archeological dig for colonial artifacts in Hingham Square will continue, for example.

Sen. Hedlund also claimed the design-build method, being used for the Greenbush project, was another ploy by the MBTA to put the project on the fast track, so to speak. With design-build — in which the contractor acts as the bank — a project does not have to be at 100 percent design before it is put out to bid and therefore, can get underway without all the permits in place. It also makes it more difficult to pull the plug on a project when it is already underway.

Hedlund cautioned the delay is not a deathblow to Greenbush but if it is ultimately killed, there would be a lot of loose ends with mitigation packages and land-takings that would need to be addressed.

But Rep. Hynes said there is no current discussion of the project being halted altogether.

"I have continued determination and optimism for the Greenbush restoration," Hynes said. "I am hopeful the delay is for the reasons stated by T officials and not because of any uneasiness with the project."

Those for and against the project agree the all important question about how to provide mass-transit to the South Shore still remains in the balance.

"I don't think if the administration kills the project, it will turn its back on the region," Hedlund said.

Jim Russell, Amy Lambiaso and Robert Aicardi also contributed to this report.

EDITORIAL

Off track

While it's still too early for Greenbush opponents to pop the corks on their vintage bottles of "no train" champagne, many of them greet the news of the sixth-month construction suspension with glee.

Others, who are stalled in traffic on Route 3A or Route 3 and the Southeast Expressway everyday, just shrug their shoulders again about the decades' old project that has become synonymous with uncertainty.

There's little doubt over the next six months the Romney administration is going to take a hard look at the cost of restoring the 17.7 miles of railroad to the South Shore. And with the current economic climate, the MBTA's burgeoning budget for Greenbush, now estimated at about $464 million, can't be good news.

That being said, unraveling the train line won't be easy.

Abandoning the project now, says rail supporter state Rep. Frank Hynes, would be "penny-wise and pound foolish."

And as state Sen. Robert Hedlund, a vocal critic of the project, said last week — there are a lot of "loose ends." Not the least of which are the mitigation agreements the towns along the corridor have inked with the MBTA. These agreements, which promised to be a boom to local downtown areas, may now be in limbo.

While Hingham Square is one of the gems of the South Shore, the prospect of ridding it of the abandoned railroad bed of its hodgepodge of parking and dumpsters and replacing them with some green space would be a real plus. Station Street is also scheduled for a facelift with a spruced up, village-like area for the shops that face the parking lot.

In Cohasset, town parking lot improvements to be paid for by the MBTA are an integral part of the Village Revitalization Project, with construction set to begin this spring. Upgrades to the long-neglected village parking lot are sorely needed and would be a big boon to the shops and businesses there.

North Scituate Village also stands to see a rebirth from the return of the rail with a station, despite opposition from some residents and merchants there. Streetscape plans were underway and there's little doubt small businesses there might find themselves booming when commuters start coming. Greenbush, the controversial end of the line, is another small business area that could benefit. You can bet the owner of the new Dunkin Donuts on the Driftway, formerly the Whistle Stop Cafe appropriately named for its anticipated proximity to the restored rail line, was banking on the train's return when he embarked on his newly opened Scituate franchise. And what about all those residents persuaded to settle on the South Shore based on a Realtors promise they would one day be able to take the train to work?

For more than a decade we've written editorials about Greenbush. We've watched those on board with the train project, jump ship and have followed an opposition movement from its grassroots beginnings through its most powerful and resolute incarnation today. We've talked about the "shifting sands" of the controversial railroad project, have nearly declared it dead, only to see it revitalized again.

This time around, Mr. Hedlund may have put it best. "The corpse is in the coffin but the lid isn't shut," he says. There may be life left in Greenbush, we certainly hope so. However, proponents and opponents can agree it's time to get off the roller coaster and make a decision once and for all. Then we can all get on with our lives.

The uncertainty about this project is, and has been unsettling and the status quo alternative to Greenbush is unacceptable. As Ron Zooleck, president and CEO of the South Shore Chamber of Commerce, says no one has every said Greenbush is not needed.

"Just look at Route 3," he says.

Our local economy can't afford to be the only greater Boston region without mass transit.

More receptivity on school budget

TO THE EDITOR:

I recently attended the School Committee meeting (Feb. 13, 2003) regarding the fiscal year 2004 budget. From the outset, I wish to commend each of the members of the School Committee for their selfless dedication of time and energy in their advocacy for the betterment of our schools. They are truly deserving of the entire community's thanks.

After acknowledging reports that State cuts to local aid may be as high as 20 percent, the School Committee voted to conditionally approve a budget for fiscal year 2004 based on an assumed cut in local aid of 10 percent. Several citizens sought discussion from the Committee on the ramifications of cuts to local aid greater than those assumed in the "conditionally approved" budget. In declining to discuss the matter, the School Committee reasoned that discussion would be a mere "exercise" based on "speculation".

While disappointed by the School Committee's vote, it was their lack of receptivity to alternative ideas that was most striking. This was evidenced throughout the course of the meeting by the School Committee's polite dismissal of suggestions from citizens in attendance (e.g., adult education, scholastic sports, library staff, etc.). It is not my purpose to debate the relative merits of the suggestions, but to illustrate my concern that we are limiting the discussion. No one knows how this budget crisis will play out; however, there should be no debate that we need to be more receptive to creative solutions.

We are missing an important opportunity for a full and open discourse on our priorities in school funding. If more draconian cuts in local aid are looming, the School Committee will need as much community involvement, understanding and support as possible. Change is difficult, but we would do well to remember the old adage "foolish consistency is the hobgoblin of little minds". Now, more than ever before, we must challenge ourselves and our elected officials to think in novel ways and to explore alternative solutions in addressing our most pressing problems.

End of environmental effort could be watershed for groups

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Last Tuesday, I attended the last South Coastal Watershed Team meeting at Norwell Town Hall. The Massachusetts Watershed Initiative (MWI) is coming to an end. The MWI is a program sponsored by the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs to promote and coordinate "intra-town" cooperation on environmental issues based on the premise that most towns have environmental issues which extend to neighboring towns because of shared watersheds. Almost always, these issues, where water, sewage, pollution, drainage, and environmental damage are involved are defined by the watersheds where the problems occur.

A watershed is an area defined by its water drainage pattern. Generally, a ridge of high ground separates one watershed from another. With modern mapping techniques, it has been possible to delineate watersheds with greater precision than ever before possible. Problems arise when, for example, a neighboring town has a landfill which is discharging pollution into the watershed containing another town's water supply, a common problem in suburban towns all over eastern Massachusetts. In Cohasset, for example, the fate of Avalon Bay, the 40B community proposed for the Web Norfolk property hangs on the delineation of the Weir River and the Lily Pond watersheds. If the Lily Pond watershed covers almost all of the Web Norfolk land as cited in the "Avalon Cohasset Hearing Submittal for the Zoning Board of Appeals," it will be considerably more difficult for Avalon to find a discharge location for their storm water and septic effluent.

Fortunately, there is promise that these diverse groups may continue to meet.

The Executive Office of Environmental Affairs espoused the Watershed principle, because it made sense to support environmental programs which solved a problem relating to several towns sharing a drainage area rather than addressing the problem for each town separately. Nevertheless, the watershed thinking was an abstruse concept, understood by environmentalists and by few others. It was an awesomely diverse group that met with George Zoto, South Coastal Watershed's team leader at the Norwell Town hall on the first Thursday of each month. Planners, environmental activists, tree huggers, public works officials, and, yes, some health board members. This was virtually the only state organization that supported and facilitated activities designed to solve regional environmental problems. A major watershed related problem for the South shore, for example, is to find enough water for the ongoing growth spurt in our towns, and fairly apportion water from a very limited supply.

Since January 1999 George Zoto sent the members of the South Coastal Watersheds team nearly 1,000 emails giving advice of grant opportunities, notice of important environmental issues of interest to the watershed, and a diversity of other topics. In all, the South Coastal Watersheds comprising towns from Bourne to Cohasset received grants in the $10,000 to $40,000 range for watershed related projects that

Bradley hits stride as he embarks on second term

Details legislative agenda for 2003

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

With two years under his belt as a state legislator, Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, is excited for the challenges his second term on Beacon Hill will present.

"The learning curve would be very steep coming in this cycle," said Bradley. "I'm happy to have had the last two years to prepare and understand how the process works because there's no time for that this year…I'm able to hit the ground running, which is critical."

Bradley, who represents Hingham, Hull, Cohasset and North Scituate, knows that some of the biggest issues in the state are also effecting his local communities.

Along with Sen. Bob Hedlund, R-Weymouth, Rep. Frank Hynes, D-Marshfield, and three other legislators, Bradley is serving on a steering committee for new legislation on Chapter 40B, the state's affordable housing law. As a lead sponsor on new 40B laws, Bradley said his goal is to redraft the bill and return "some level of control to the local communities."

Step one, he said, would be putting a moratorium on current 40B laws to prevent an onslaught of developers from applying for comprehensive permits. Step two would be to allow communities to negotiate with developers so that deeds would be "in perpetuity," allowing affordable housing to become permanent, instead of returning to market value after 15 to 25 years, as is currently the case.

"That really has a negative effect on the community because it's like taking two steps forward and three steps back," said Bradley.

Bradley is also working to allow "in-law" apartments to count as affordable housing. Recently passed legislation allows only those "in-law" apartments built after July 31, 2002 to count. But Bradley said by allowing all such units to count, towns could have more control over how they determine their approach to affordable housing. Allowing newly developed units to count under "inclusionary zoning", Bradley said, would also have that effect.

Bradley is also the lead sponsor on a bill to reform the state's School Building Assistance Program, which reimburses towns for new schools. Funding for the program was cut from $52 million to $30 million last year, Bradley said, and he fears it will be cut again if action is not taken. More than 300 communities are on the on the waiting list to be reimbursed through the program — including Scituate, Hull and Cohasset — and Bradley does not want to see them hung out to dry by the state.

"What we're looking to do is transfer the School Building Assistance program out of the operating budget and into and under the bond cap," he said. "By transferring it to the bond cap, communities will receive their money within a fixed time…They can properly plan, and more importantly, we make the state keep its word."

A third bill that Bradley is sponsoring would change the way the state handles capital gains tax.. By building capital gains revenue into the budget year after year, Bradley says the state set itself up for the current fiscal crisis.

With capital gains now plummeting, revenue shortfalls are unparalleled. Bradley said revenue from capital gains dropped from $1 billion two years ago to $200 million last year.

Bradley's solution? "Any capital gains tax that comes in, I want to spend a third, save a third, and return a third to the taxpayers," he said.

State Treasurer Tim Cahill swears in state Rep. Garrett Bradley for a second term, as Bradley's wife Heather looks on. The special event took place at Tosca in Hingham on Jan. 31.

When it comes to a national solution to the deficit, Bradley also has ideas. "We have 45 states that are running a deficit. What the federal governments should be doing right now is stepping up and doing a state stimulus package. That's the type of stimulus package that will actually have an effect where the rubber meets the road," he said.

Another piece of legislation Bradley is sponsoring would prevent the Fore River Bridge from being raised at peak traffic hours. "I've been driving that road since I was 14 years old going to BC High. I've never understood why they couldn't do that," he said.

Bradley is serving on a steering committee for new legislation on Chapter 40B, the state's affordable housing law.

Bradley filed the bill after several constituents brought the matter to his attention. He tried to talk with Mass Highway, but officials there told him that it was up to the Coast Guard. Now, Congressman Delahunt, D-Quincy, is arranging a meeting between Bradley, Sen. Hedlund, and the Coast Guard.

"The resulting traffic creates economic loss and environmental damage that is far greater than a ship sitting at anchor for an hour or planning ahead and not coming in at that point," Bradley said.

If the Coast Guard tells him tides are to blame, Bradley wants to see proof.

"It's just too much traffic," he said. "That's a major roadway in the morning for the South Shore. If the bridge goes up, all the side roads are jammed through Braintree and Weymouth."

Bradley is also asking for a permanent notification system on the new Fore River Bridge so that commuters can prepare for all openings.

Outside of his legislative work, Bradley is working with Sen. Hedlund to facilitate a deal between the Cohasset Water Department, Aquarion Water Company, and the Erickson Retirement Community planned for Hingham.

Erickson is in desperate need of water, Aquarion is the company that provides water in Hingham, and Cohasset has water to spare — at a price, of course. By bringing the parties together, Bradley is hoping they can come to an agreement more easily.

"If done correctly I think it can be a win for both communities," said Bradley. "It's good for Cohasset because A.) they have plenty of water in their aquifer, and B.) they get significant revenues to their community at a time when most communities are going to be losing revenue to local aid."

"It's positive for the town of Hingham because we get to do some of these projects that the town boards have approved, and we do it by not draining off the existing aquifer."

Bradley said the deal represents a larger theme that he feels is part of his job as a representative — making sure development is proceeding according to the wishes of town boards and residents.

"If I can have an effect helping a community develop a parcel of land in a way they feel is positive to the community, I want to do that," he said.

A "triple eagle" graduate of B.C. High, B.C., and B.C. Law School, Bradley is hoping his experience as prosecutor in Plymouth County will make him a contributor of the Criminal Justice Committee. He said the "per se" law could come up for discussion. The law would make breathalyzer readings indisputable.

"We're the only state in the union which doesn't allow you to take the breathalyzer as being 'per se' under the influence. You can draw an inference from it," said Bradley. "We lose somewhere around $50 million a year in federal highway funds by not having a per se law."

But when it comes down to it, Bradley said the budget crisis is by far the biggest issue facing the state. He said revenue drop-off last year was 15.5 percent, compared with only 3.5 percent in the recession in the early 1990s.

"What I've been telling my Boards of Selectmen — every group I go in front of — I've been telling them: 'I'll be honest with you, but there are going to be some tough choices. You're not going to like a lot of what I have to say over the next two years. But it's going to be honest and its going to be straightforward.'"

Purity of language

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

The next Russian businessman who tells his friend he is in "mirchendaizing" is liable to wind up in the gulag, which, as everyone knows, is English for tourist accommodations in Siberia.

The Russian legislature, or State Duma, is in the process of outlawing the use of foreign words when a perfectly good Russian word will accomplish the same purpose.

When this is done in the United States it is considered to be the work of John Ashcroft, Jesse Helms and Rush Limbaugh and the Cambridge City Council passes a resolution decrying it.

Under the law that would make Russian the official state language, politicians speaking about default on debts would have to say "nevypolneniye obyazatelstv" instead of "defolt" as in default.

"Unfortunately, there are no legal norms in our current legislation on the purity of the Russian language," said Alexei Alexeyev, one of the 12 legislators who filed the bill to fix that omission.

The bill was passed by the lower house of the State Duma earlier this month and now only needs to be approved by the upper house and signed by President Vladimir Putin to become law.

This was part of "Operation Linguistic Cleansing," led by the French Language Self-Defense Brigade.

A number of countries are taking steps to protect the "purity" of their native languages, chiefly from English, which can be a monumental task when there is a McDonald's on every block offering "le hamburgaire."

In Latvia, it's the Russian language which is under fire. A Latvian law requires that 75 per cent of all radio commercials and talk be in Latvian, a language that was suppressed when Latvia was a Russian satellite.

This was a tough turnaround since 40 per cent of Latvia's 2.4 million people use Russian as their primary language and those who wish to can still tune their TVs in to Moscow channels.

The Latvians even have an official government agency which is charged with making up Latvian words to replace modern foreign words and a language police to check on the use of Latvian words by Latvians.

The French language is regarded as so important in the Quebec province of Canada that St. Nicholas Antiochian Orthodox Church in Montreal was firebombed after its social hall was used for a fund-raiser by Alliance Quebec, an English-speaking rights group.

This was part of "Operation Linguistic Cleansing," led by the French Language Self-Defense Brigade.

"From now on, hall owners who rent to Alliance Quebec must know that by associating with these anti-Quebec racists, they expose themselves to reprisal," said the Brigade in letters to newspapers.

Even the English are at odds with the Americans over the language they both share. The fighting was particularly fierce when the English found American spellchecks on their own computers.

"As if Microsoft, the Internet, Disney, rap music, McDonald's and chads were not enough to contend with, we now find a fifth column in our own midst," grumbled The Independent newspaper in an editorial.

"Are we really going to take lessons in language from the land whose president came up with, 'It depends what the meaning of 'is' is.'"

were identified as priorities in the Annual Work Plan.. Cohasset received more than $150,000 over four years that in some way supported watershed related projects. This was virtually the only way some small activist groups could become a part of the big environmental picture.

A major part of the watershed initiative was the nurturing of smaller watershed organizations. The South Shore doesn't have large rivers such as the Neponset or the Charles whose watershed associations are powerful forces in the region. Instead we have the North South River Watershed Association, our largest, the Jones River and Eel River Watershed Associations and others, and in Cohasset, the Gulf Associations. All have benefited from association with other similarly minded groups swapping information and techniques, and frequently collaborating to obtain joint watershed grants.

Fortunately, there is promise that these diverse groups may continue to meet. In the discussions last week, in a loose jointed way, characteristic of most discussions of those who deal with nature, there was an expressed desire to continue to swap information about grant opportunities, major watershed issues, and recent events affecting the participants. It was unanimously agreed that future meetings of the team should be identified under a new name: the South Coastal Watersheds Alliance.

Samantha Woods, Executive Director of the NSRWA expressed a desire to provide a resource to other watershed-based organizations, and Wendy Garpeau, South Shore Coordinator of the Massachusetts Bays Program, a division of the Massachusetts Coastal Zone Management division of the EOEA indicated that, since she was sited at the NSRWA she could act as coordinator for future meetings. So, it seems that, for the near future anyway, one day a month is still spoken for, for watershed issues.

It's for the future to say what impact the watershed concept has in cleaning up the region and how well communities will communicate without the coordination provided to our region for the past five years by the Watershed Initiative. But for Cohasset, it gave us an invaluable plan that will lead us into a cleaner more healthy use of our town's precious environmental resources.

Brick by Brick program for new Our World playground

Our World, Children's Global Discovery Museum celebrated its groundbreaking in November 2002 and renovations are underway to the museum's space which will be located adjacent to the new Paul Pratt Memorial Library on Sohier Street in Cohasset. Our World has raised one-third of the funds needed to meet its goal for the opening of the museum and are portions of the museum are expected to open in the fall of 2003.

The focus now is on fundraising for the playground which will be built adjacent to Our World. The play structure previously donated to the town of Cohasset (known to many families as the Pirate Park) was outdated and eventually removed for safety reasons. The goal is to renovate the existing area and provide a new playground that Cohasset residents, along with visitors to Our World and the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, will enjoy for years to come.

The estimated cost to rebuild the playground is $125,000. One of the ways the Our World Playground Committee will be raising funds for the playground is with the "Brick by Brick" program.

Through the Brick by Brick program, your donation of $100 will be recognized with an engraved brick. You can have your name, your family's name, loved one or your business name celebrated in brick. If you prefer, you also have the opportunity to contribute a larger engraved paver or a beautiful hardwood bench complete with an engraved brass plate.

Engraved bricks and pavers will be used in walkways and as accents throughout the surrounding areas of the playground. Construction on the walkways is slated to begin in the spring of 2003. All the funds generated by the Brick by Brick program will go directly to the designing and purchasing of play structures, landscaping of the play area and on-going maintenance.

To participate in the Brick by Brick program, please call Debbie Kuppens at (781) 383-6399. If you have any questions about the playground project or would like to make a larger contribution, please call Our World at (781) 383-3198. Please note that your donation is tax deductible.

The first 100 brick orders received will be entered into a drawing for a $100 gift certificate for dinner at Atlantica Restaurant in Cohasset.

Start of recession recovery could be 18 months off

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

A recap and analysis of the week in state government.

Lobbyists and tourists and wide-eyed eighth-graders shivered in line to pass through metal detectors at the State House, getting the once-over from MDC park rangers just to be sure they weren't Al Qaeda.

The piercing glances were a bit more lingering during the full week of orange alert, adding to the edgy gloominess that seeped into the Statehouse months ago.

Discussion of hypothetical disasters (the first smallpox vaccines were administered last week to Massachusetts health-care workers) mingled unpleasantly with the real calamity already unfolding in the impassive reams of economic data and budget legislation occupying the Statehouse's attention. Lives are at stake on both fronts.

"We're told we can't count on any growth in the economy for the next 18 months," Governor Romney said. After a year and a half of declining state tax revenues, that is appalling news — so bad it almost doesn't seem possible. Those revenues are determined entirely by how well the economy does, and they pay for things no one but the state is willing to supply — like dentures for old ladies, and shelter for abused women.

"I do hope that's pessimistic," Romney said of his advisors' economic forecast. But his hope seemed wan as the sunlight fighting its losing weeklong battle with the incredible, indifferent February chill.

The weakness of his faith in the state's near future is shared by his constituents. Massachusetts has begun lagging the nation as a whole in consumer confidence. That element — confidence — is the economy's defining factor, and the state seems to be losing it. That's why Frederick Breimyer, chief economist at State Street Corp., said not only is the recession surprisingly stubborn, looking forward, he's only willing to use the word recovery "in quotes."

The result could be seen on the floor of the Legislature last week. Senators passed a bill helping to paper over this year's budget gap by diverting about $145 million from various smallish specialty state reserve funds. As they did so, the Senate Ways and Means Chairwoman, Therese Murray, told her colleagues the state's disparity between income and spending just this year could be $105 million larger than the latest revised revenue projections. That's like a family of four finding out it's going to come up short about $5,000 this year, with a pay cut on the way.

A lot of families are facing situations almost that bad as businesses lay people off and cancel spending. That limits politicians' willingness to preserve programs by raising taxes. That can actually make the economy worse; some of the spending now being cut at the state level helps business create jobs, or unskilled workers to train for them.

Massachusetts has begun lagging the nation as a whole in consumer confidence.

The spiral is beginning to look at least as bad as it did 10 years ago: the government struggles, so business leaders lose confidence, so the economy suffers, so the government struggles. Fear of war, fear of terrorism, a lack of understanding how to turn things around are all converging.

Romney named members to his new regional economic competitiveness councils; business leaders vowed a strong effort to maintain tax breaks and regulation rollbacks they say keep the state business-friendly. Here's a recap of the other news:

- The governor appeared at the Local Government Advisory Council meeting, usually chaired by the lieutenant governor. He said he wants to improve his relationship with the mayors and boards of selectmen – but won't raise taxes, and will likely make more cuts in local aid. But the locals by and large said they appreciated the gesture.
- The state may now seek to recoup overruns caused by incompetence and malfeasance for 10 years after the actionable occurrence, if the House goes along with the legislation, as expected; the governor is a supporter. Betchel Parsons Brinckerhoff is enduring lots of anger after the Globe detailed how, among other curiosities, the contractor forgot to include the FleetCenter in its design diagrams.
- Permitting delays, rising costs and political opposition were cited. The decision left project opponents optimistic that the whole effort will be cancelled. Romney transportation aides say no final decision has been made.
- The "yes" side and the "no" side held lobby days simultaneously, and the issues were the persistent ones: the value of innovation versus the cost to traditional schools. It's a debate that lawmakers will take up this spring.
- The lower numbers from 2002 show "those who suggested the sky was going to fall because of MCAS were wrong," said Education Commissioner David Driscoll.
- In a span of just days, the junior US senator announced he has prostrate cancer, underwent successful surgery and looked forward to being cancer-free after doctors determined the cancer had not spread. He'll resume his presidential campaign in two weeks.
- The state and localities could recoup about $40 million from Washington for security; the governor wrote to Homeland Security Director Tom Ridge, and legislators discussed how to lobby effectively for the state's share of a $3.5 billion federal appropriation.
- Via executive order, Romney mandated that all nominees must possess 10 years of legal experience; some political appointees didn't have that. Nominees may not lobby members of the Judicial Nominating Council, nor donate money to constitutional officers. Romney said he shares the perception that politics is influencing judicial picks.

Weir River canoe launch, educational center backed

State Sen. Robert L. Hedlund, R-Weymouth, has put his efforts behind the Town of Hull's grant application to the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs that would provide funding for the study and future planning of the Weir River Estuary. The grant would subsequently lead to the implementation of a kayak/canoe launch area and an educational center.

The Weir River Estuary, which was designated as an Area of Critical Environmental Concern in 1996, includes 950 acres of extensive salt marshes throughout the greater Boston area. The Weir River Watershed covers 23.4 square miles and is located throughout the towns of Cohasset, Hingham, Hull, and Norwell. The estuary serves as both a nursery and feeding area for a diversity of fish and bird species, and also contains many marsh grasses and plant species throughout its land.

The grant would provide funds allowing the town to hire a qualified firm to conduct a survey of existing conditions, design access for kayaks and canoes that would have minimal impacts on the marshes, identify permits, and develop signage identifying the location as public access for kayaks and canoes.

"This project will enhance the environment along the Weir River for the residents and organizations of Hull, Cohasset, Hingham, and other surrounding communities as well," Hedlund said.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local senators' votes on three roll calls from the week of February 10-14. There were no roll calls in the House last week.

DEFICIT REDUCTION PLAN (S 1939) Senate 38-0, gave near final approval to a deficit reduction plan designed to help close the state's estimated $600 million to $650 million fiscal 2003 budget deficit. The House has okayed a different plan and a conference committee will likely hammer out a compromise version. A key provision, estimated to raise $73 million, increases fees on many real estate transactions conducted at Registries of Deeds across the state and imposes an additional $5 surcharge on all transactions. The measure also taps reserve funds including $40 million from a capital projects fund; $12 million from a workforce training fund; $2.9 million form the Clean Elections Judgment Fund; and $35 million from the Renewable Energy Trust Fund. Other provisions include making some retroactive changes in corporate tax laws including allowing the state to collect taxes on income and dividends from Real Estate Investment Trusts. Supporters said the bill would generate $267 million that in conjunction with Gov. Romney's recent $343 million in budget cuts would close the state's entire fiscal 2003 deficit. They noted the bill does not cut any programs and argued that it also closes many corporate tax loopholes that cost the state millions in lost tax revenue. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill). — Y

BIG DIG LAWSUITS (S 1939) Senate 38-0, approved an amendment extending the statute of limitations on lawsuits brought by the federal or state government or their contractors arising out of contracts for the planning, design or construction of the $14 billion Big Dig project. The amendment allows suits to be filed on past violations up to ten years after this amendment becomes law and future suits up to ten years following the violation. Current law only allows the filing of suits for three to six years following the incident. Amendment supporters said recent reports show that recovery efforts for outrageous cost overruns were weak and argued that it is time to hold businesses accountable for their overruns and mismanagement on this taxpayer-funded project. (A "Yea" vote is for extending the statute of limitations). — Y

NEWBORN HOME VISITING PROGRAM (S 1939) Senate 39-0, approved an amendment restoring $2 million of the $4 million cut by Gov. Romney from the neonatal and postnatal home parenting education and home visiting programs for at-risk newborns. Amendment supporters said that if the funding is not restored, the program would shut down and all 3221 families currently enrolled would be discharged. They noted that the programs, focused on first-time parents under 21, have been very successful in educating teen parents about taking care of their babies. They argued that this has resulted in a reduction in child abuse, increased health for the children and reduced subsequent pregnancies for the teenage mothers. (A "Yea" vote is for restoring the $2 million). — Y

ALSO UP ON BEACON HILL

PHARMACY TAX (S 1939) - The Senate rejected on a voice vote, without a roll call vote, an amendment to repeal the $36 million annual assessment the legislature imposed last year on pharmacies for each non-Medicaid and non-Medicare prescription they fill. The assessment led to many of the state's pharmacies charging customers a $1.30-per-prescription fee to cover the assessment. Last week, the state's major pharmacy chains agreed to stop charging the fee. A roll call vote is required if six senators request it but fewer than six requested a roll call on this amendment.

NO CLEAN ELECTIONS CANDIDATES - Governor Romney signed into law legislation making candidates in a special election to fill the recently vacated House seat of former Rep. Joe Sullivan on the South Shore ineligible to run as Clean Elections candidates. The Clean Elections Law provides public financing of campaigns to candidates who agree to certain fundraising and spending limits. A spokeswoman for Gov. Romney said that nomination papers are due shortly and there is not enough time for the regular Clean Elections process to play out in this election.

CHARTER SCHOOL MORATORIUM - Supporters of Massachusetts charter schools descended on the Statehouse to express their opposition to proposed legislation that would place a moratorium on new charter schools in the Bay State.

JUDICIAL NOMINATING PROCESS - Gov. Romney has issued an Executive Order announcing what he called "a non-partisan, merit-based process for nominating judges in Massachusetts." Provisions include prohibiting applicants from making political contributions to the governor or lieutenant governor and a total ban on political contributions and activity by any nominee; barring applicants from campaigning for a judgeship via telephone or email; and "blind review" of applicants' qualifications without regard to their names and political connections. — Y

Criminal checks required for school employees, volunteers

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

In keeping with a new state law that takes effect Feb. 25, the Cohasset School Department will need to conduct criminal record checks every three years on all its employees and most volunteers, including parents who may go along on field trips.

Signed into law by Acting Gov. Jane Swift in November, "An Act Further Protecting Children" amended previous legislation on background checks by making it stricter.

Schools no longer have discretion to decide when, and under what circumstances, to conduct criminal background checks on employees, job applicants and volunteers who have unsupervised contact with children. The statute now imposes a legal obligation on schools to conduct the background checks on those groups "periodically, but not less then every three years."

Superintendent Ed Malvey said he was not aware of any changes to the original version of the law, which has been in place for several years. "If there have been further changes, we have not addressed them yet," he said.

Malvey said criminal record checks for new hires had been "standard procedure" since he joined Cohasset schools five years ago. He said volunteers were subject to the checks if it was known far enough in advance for results to be returned on time.

The criminal record checks are obtained by requiring potential employees or volunteers to complete a CORI [Criminal Offender Record Information] form. The superintendent's office forwards the request for CORI data to the state Criminal History Systems Bureau and the school department acts on CORI information on a case-by-case basis.

Malvey said he had not updated any CORI information for employees except for those who had gone to another school district and then returned. Under the new law, the school department would need to update all CORI checks more than three years old.

According to the CORI office, through the background checks, schools receive information on convictions, pending circumstances and dismissals. The office spokesman explained that schools get more information because they deal with children, while some businesses that run background checks might not get dismissals, for example.

While the CORI office provides criminal record offender information, it does not provide advice or suggestions with hiring decisions or other employer action. Questions regarding the use of CORI information should be discussed with legal counsel, the office said.

Malvey said there were no set guidelines as to what would disqualify a candidate from being eligible for employment or volunteer work. "We treat each case individually," he said. "What we're really concerned with is behavior with children."

In some communities, every time a child is enrolled in school the parents are given a CORI form with the thought, they may go on a field trip at some point. Hingham is distributing a copy of the revised CORI procedure with in all current employees' paychecks and has set up procedures for implementing the law that include what actions may be appropriate if a CORI report is positive. Hingham Supt. Dorothy Galo said some towns are taking a hard line and cited an example in another school system of a Dad who wasn't allowed to attend a first-grade field trip because of an OUI conviction in his youth.

State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, said he supports the law in concept.

"Certainly some level of checking people who watch over our children is appropriate," he said, adding he hoped access to the forms would be restricted to certain individuals.

Malvey said CORI files were kept extremely confidential. He said he personally reviewed CORI data and shared the information with administrators only on a need-to-know basis.

CORI and the law

- The new law, "An Act Further Protecting Children," was signed into law on Nov. 27, 2002
- CORI stands for Criminal Offender Record Information
- The state Criminal History Systems Board of the Executive Office of Public Safety oversees CORI
- The CORI Web site is www.state.ma.us/chsb/CORI.html
- CORI telephone number is 671-660-4640

The new law imposes a legal obligation on schools to conduct criminal background checks.

Let it snow, let it snow

DAVE INGBER

Could someone please tell me what exactly the "Let it Snow" songwriter was thinking when he called the weather outside "frightful"?

I have given it some thought, and I think I figured it out. It seems that, as I get older, the pure and pristine pleasure that used to come hand-in-hand with snowfall has been replaced by a disgruntled association with thick, wet precipitation.

Instead of plunging into the nearest snow bank for the day's first snow angel, we are enduring the marathon known as shoveling the driveway. Instead of rushing down a hill on freshly pumped inner tube, we are lifting and grunting a set of snow tires onto our SUV's. Instead of engaging in snowball forts, we are anxiously waiting for the plows to come by our streets.

Since I entered teenagerhood (also known as the time when shoveling stopped being the father's responsibility and became the son's), I too have had the subconscious connection of snow with hassle. But some of my favorite memories are set in a landscape of white. With the majority of postseason MIAA practices, meets and games in Massachusetts post-

Swimmers close out in style at BCC meet

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The Scituate-Cohasset swim team made their final splash of the regular season on Sunday at the Bay Colony Conference Championships, with the women's team finishing sixth and men's taking eighth. It was the third straight year that both teams ended in the top ten of its conference despite much larger and more established competition.

"Our program is growing," started coach Jamie Kearney, who has been at the helm of the Skipper-Sailor squad for all three of the top 10 finishes, "but what this relatively small team has accomplished this year is simply remarkable."

The Sci-Cohs switched out of the Pilgrim Conference last year to face competition more comparable in numbers to themselves. Yet, the Bay Conference competition, while far more competitive with the Sci-Cohs, still possessed the ability to overwhelm the small South Shore shared squad by sheer numbers. The Sci-Cohs still put forth an impressive effort, with more than several squad members placing in individual and relay events.

Senior Coral Yang, an exchange student through the AFS program at Scituate High, completed her only BCC Championship as the top point scorer on the team with a sixth place in the 200 yard Individual Medley with a season best time of 2:40.12 and a seventh place in the 100 freestyle with another personal record, 1:03.05. Yang will lead a host of Sci-Coh females into Sectionals later this week, having qualified for the postseason in five different events.

Senior captain Kathryn Noonan, who, among others,

Cohasset senior Terry Baroudi prepares to lay an atomic knee slam on Canton's Jeff Sullivan ...oh that's right, this is real wrestling. Baroudi won this semifinals match and all of his others to capture the Div. 3 South Sectional crown in the 135-poound division this past weekend. He, along with eight of his teammates, advanced out of Sectionals to this weekend's Div. 3 state championships.

Battle ready

Cohasset wrestling team advances nine to state championships

By Mike Spellman

There were surprises, both good and bad, disappointments and a few great stories to come out of this past weekend's Div. 3 South Sectional championships for the Cohasset High wrestling team. The bottom line, though, when this weekend of craziness finally ended was the local squad could boast a second place finish in the field of 21 and the advancement of nine wrestlers to the Div. 3 state championships.

"Overall, I'm happy," said longtime Cohasset coach Torin Sweeney, whose team finished second to only host Foxboro High at the Sectional meet, which started early Friday afternoon and went late into Saturday evening. "We had a couple of kids lose bouts we thought they might win, but just about everyone wrestled well."

Wrestling for the Skippers at this weekend's divisional state championships at Burlington High School will be Jonathan Littauer (103 pounds), Dave Kupsc (112), Dave McKenna (119), Joe Kehoe (125), Terry Baroudi (135), Phil Strazzulla (140), Chris McKenna (145), Cosimo Cambi (189) and Matt Baroudi (215).

Boys fall to Southeastern

Hoopsters look to close tough luck season strong

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

A shorthanded Cohasset boys basketball team nearly stunned tourney-bound Southeastern in the opening round of the Mansfield Tourney on Sunday night before the Hawks superior inside game finally wore the Skippers down and allowed them to escape with a 61-51 win.

With South Shore League all-star Chris Bilodeau (21 points) continuing his torrid pace of late, the Skippers carried a six-point lead into the final five minutes of the first half. However, Southeastern (18-1) closed with a 10-0 run to take a 31-27 edge into the break. It was a lead the Hawks would never relinquish.

"We were missing a few players, and Southeastern was really big up front with a 6-4 and 6-5 player," reported Cohasset head coach Ron Ford. "Our guys played hard, and I thought pretty well overall, but we just didn't have enough answers down the stretch.

"Chris (Bilodeau) played a great game. He really helped keep us in it."

Ford went on to also laud the play of two of Bilodeau's fellow juniors: center Sean Connolly (eight points) and point guard John Andrade.

"Sean played a good game inside, especially considering he didn't have the support around him he normally has," said Ford, referring to the absences of power forward Ben Lynner and backup center Scott Faber.

"And John (Andrade) did a nice job of handling the press. I thought he played with a lot of poise."

The Mansfield Tourney consolation game against Dighton-Rehoboth (12-7), originally scheduled for Monday but wiped out by the snowstorm, was moved to Wednesday afternoon after the Mariner press time. Unfortunately, Ford heads into this one with just seven healthy bodies.

This will be the regular season finale for the Skippers (7-12), who won four of five games previous to the Southeastern setback.

"We've ended the season strong, which is what you like to see," concluded Ford. "It says something about the character of this team. We've got some good players coming back next year, and I'm hoping to end this season on a positive note."

Champion's pride

Cohasset skaters crush Crusaders to stop slide

By Joel Racicot
JRACICOT@CNC.COM

When you are the champions of your league, as the Cohasset boys hockey team is, you are expected to play at a certain level of excellence. After playing five sub-par games it was time for Cohasset to play like the champions they are, and they did.

The Skippers defeated Carver 9-1 in a game that featured good skating, sharp passing and excellent goaltending from the South Shore League's best. The game also knocked Carver out of postseason contention.

"We really had been struggling, but we're back to where we want to be," acknowledged Cohasset head coach John Blake. "We were going through the motions the last couple of games. We weren't playing with enough emotion, but that definitely changed tonight."

Cohasset forward Mike Martone (#7) spins away from the check of Scituate's Bill Cibere in recent non-league tilt at Hingham's Pilgrim Arena.

At 13:35 in the first period, Cohasset gave the initial blow when defenseman Ted Straughn took a pass from behind the net to put the Skippers up 1-0. At 5:32 to go in the period Michael Martone scored off a rebound in front of the Carver goalie to give Cohasset a 2-0 lead.

The second period started with Carver on the power play after John Durkin had been put in the

The Skippers finished with 180 placement points to Foxboro's 243. Mansfield took third place with 162.5 points.

The top point-getters for Cohasset were senior Terry Baroudi and sophomore Jonathan Littauer, both going unbeaten to capture the championships in their respective weight divisions.

Littauer, who wrestled at 103, follows in the footsteps of a few older brothers who went on to wrestle at the state championships. He earned the top seed in his division, and more than lived up to that billing, pinning fourth seeded Eric DeWolf of Hopkinton in the semifinals and easily besting Canton's JJ McKenzie (third seed), 9-3, in the finals.

Senior captain Terry Baroudi committed himself to an intense training regimen after finishing fourth at Sectionals last year, and he saw that hard work pay off, as he too earned the number one seed and swept all comers over the weekend. He dominated Carver's Chris Foley, 10-2, and Canton's fourth seeded Jeff Sullivan, 7-1, on his way to the finals, where he beat Duxbury's second seeded Scott Klebanoff for the third time in as many tries this season.

Baroudi's larger kid brother Matt, a sophomore, was one of three Cohasset wrestlers who took second place, all three losing to the one seed in their respective divisions in the finals.

Matt Baroudi earned the second seed after a breakthrough sophomore season wrestling at 215. He pinned three of his five opponents on the way to the finals, including one on sixth seeded CJ Fuchs of Hopkinton in the semis. He then wrestled top seeded Paul Kenyan (who is ranked fourth in the state) tougher than most everyone in attendance anticipated in the championship bout before falling to the more experienced Dedham grappler, 9-5.

"Matt really had a great tourney," lauded coach Sweeney. "I really thought he could have beaten Kenyan. It'll be interesting to see what happens if he gets him again at ates."

Joe Kehoe stunned the South Shore wrestling community when he took second place at 112 pounds at Sectionals last year as a freshman, but few were surprised when he equaled that achievement this time around as a sophomore in the 125 pound class. Joe was seeded third, but upset Dedham's Charlie Citrone in the semifinals, 6-2, to advance for a showdown with Rockland's Zach Gorman, who had defeated Joe in their two previous meetings. Unfortunately the third time did not prove the charm for the young Skipper, and he had to settle for second place.

The third second place finisher for Cohasset was senior second-year wrestler Cosimo Cambi, and this was a surprise. Cambi, a superb athlete and football talent, only started to come into his own as a wrestler toward the tail end of this season. He was seeded seventh, but pulled off upsets over Hanover's Nick Rierdon in a 4-3 buzzer beater in the quarterfinals and then Holliston's sixth seeded Jim Domestico in the semifinals, 11-6. He came within inches of stunning everyone in attendance in the finals against defending Sectional champ Matt Lanuto, of Duxbury, nearly getting him onto his back for what could have been a pin situation. However, Lanuto fended that of, and eventually went on to pin Cambi.

"Obviously, Cosimo is one of the really great stories for us," said Sweeney. "He's really committed himself to wrestling since he joined up two years ago, and it's great to see that type of dedication pay off."

Team captains Chris McKenna (145) and Phil Strazzulla (140) both lost heartbreakers in the semifinals, but battled back to take third place honors in the consolation match.

McKenna, seeded second, lost a 3-1 decision to Keefe Tech's third seeded Ryan Lutrell, a wrestler he had beaten in their only previous meeting. He bounced back, though with a lopsided 6-1 decision over Holliston's fourth seeded Naeem Ovins, last year's Sectional champ at 140.

Strazzulla, a junior captain, wrestled much of the season at 130, but had trouble making that weight, so he finally decided to leap two classes to 140 (135 was out of the question with Baroudi entrenched there). Earning a fifth seed, Strazzulla lost a heartbreaker to Ashland's fourth seeded Nick Buchan on Friday, but then won three straight matches to set up a rematch with Buchan for third place. Strazzulla got his revenge with a 7-4 win.

"Phil's another one of those great stories," asserted Sweeney. "First, you've got him jumping two weight classes midseason then you've got him winning four matches out of the loser's bracket to finish third. I'm real proud of him."

Senior Dave Kuspc (112) and freshman Dave McKenna (119), Chris' brother, earned their way to this weekend's festivities with clutch wins on Saturday.

Kupsc, who wrestled at 103 much of the year flip-flopping with Littauer and entered Sectionals with a seventh seed, was knocked off in the quarterfinals by Watertown's second seeded Donald Rando. He then beat Hull's Rob Smolinsky, 4-2, and Keefe Tech's sixth seeded Diego Lopes by pin to sew up a top six spot and an extended season. Rockland's fourth seeded Leo Mahoney then bested him, 14-3, but Kupsc ended the days on a high note with a pin in the fifth/sixth place consolation match against Holliston's fifth seeded Bill Drake.

McKenna pulled off a big overtime win over Rockland's Scott Gerrish to advance to the top six. He then lost a heartbreaker to Canton's Kevin Mathieson, getting caught in a spradle and pinned in a match that saw him leading. He came back strong, though, to take the fifth/sixth place consolation match.

After losing his bid to advance to States in heartbreaking fashion, getting pinned late in the third round of a match in which he held a 1-0 lead, sophomore Matt Casey showed some character to come back with a 3-0 win to earn seventh place and a couple of points for his team.

will be joining Yang at Sectionals for the 100 backstroke, took eighth in that event at the BCC Championship in a time of 1:12.22.

The Sci-Cohs' own coverage reporter scored highest for the men, earning 16 points with eighth and sixth places in the 200 IM and the 100 breaststroke. The senior ended his 13 year career of competitive swimming for Cohasset teams with personal bests in both events.

Maran Monaco, an exchange student from Brazil, placed in both of his Individuals in his final swim meet in America. The converted water polo star took tenth in the 50 freestyle, breaking 27 seconds for the first time, and finished 12th in the 100 free with a 1:01.43.

"It seemed like every time I turned around, someone was swimming in their final race ever," observed Kearney. "I am going to miss this senior class so much. Their swimming skills aside, the intangibles they brought to the team chemistry will be impossible to replace."

Aside from those already mentioned of the final year swimmers, the team will lose captains Bryan Bilton and Erin Feeney to graduation. Luckily, the team has a solid foundation of young talented swimmers, many of whom will be looked to for major contributions in the coming years.

Cohasset's Amanda Daley, the only freshman who qualified for Sectionals, took 11th in the 100 backstroke, a second behind Noonan, and 12th in the 200 IM, two seconds behind Yang.

"[Daley] has been a huge asset to our team this year," noted Kearney. "Seeing her come in right behind two of my seniors in both those events, it was like a changing of the guard. I know she is really going to be leading the way for us in the next couple of years."

Sophomores Liz Tierney and Becky Keys will also be looked to as key members of future teams. Keys ended a terrific diving season by finishing fourth in the Conference, and took a pair of 13th place finishes in the 200 and 500 freestyles. Tierney placed in the breaststroke with an 11th place finish. In addition, she took 17th in the 100 freestyle, one place behind junior captain Delia Regan, who took 16th. Regan also took 13th in the 50 free.

The meet officials took the time to recognize every senior in the Conference by name, and had them ring the pool. The team will undergo some major reconstruction this offseason, requiring some heavy recruitment, especially for the men's team. However, this year's BCC Championship served as a very nice tribute to those seniors who made the 2002-2003 season a successful one.

poned due to the current road conditions, I am reminded of the snowy sports that made up the youth of my friends and me.

We would wake up at six o'clock on a Sunday morning to be the first ones to the sledding hill, staying until our fingers and toes were fantastically frozen. Then, we would head back to someone's house to throw our wet coats, gloves, hats, socks and snowpants in the dryer. After thawing ourselves, in the meantime emptying the house of all its hot chocolate mix, we would head right back outside until dark.

Other times, we would lace up our skates and create "the whip", where a line of skaters would use momentum to get one skater flying around in a circle. Sometimes, we would build elaborate forts, everyone calling their own the best the neighborhood had ever seen. Most of the time, we would just get into the old fashioned stuff, hurling snowballs at each other until someone got hit in the face with one containing a rock, and the day's fun was over. Ah, to be a kid again.

Yet here I sit, watching three feet of snow creeping up the windows of my house, and all I can think of is how much of a bother it is that it will be at least another day before I can drive anywhere. What happened to the days when a fresh coat of snow on the lawn meant a full day's worth of entertainment?

For the vast majority of high school athletes, the exception being the fortunate ones who have entered the playoffs either as an individual or with his/her team, the winter season is over. The basketball players, wrestlers, swimmers, hockey players and gymnasts will have to wait another nine months before they can get back to their organized teams.

Organized sports are indeed done, but 'tis the season for the most fun sports: the disorganized ones. Sledding, skating, snowball fighting, skiing, fort building. These are the sports that are played with fun-loving friends and without referees, revolting rules and repulsive regulations.

I realize that, at 18 years old, writing a piece about my "youth" is like skating on thin ice—going too far could be dangerous. Still, the snowstorm earlier this week reminded me why winter was always my favorite season.

The weather outside is anything but frightful. Maybe the writer of that song was just a Californian who moved to New England and was understandably spiteful. But for a Boston boy who has lived here his whole life, this is just plain delightful.

Girls' softball pre-season hitters' workshop debuts at SSBC

Starts Feb. 23 in Hingham

HINGHAM - Softball takes center stage at the South Shore Baseball Club with the debut of its Pre-Season Hitters' Workshop for girls, starting February 23 and under the direction of Kate Daley, in Hingham. Girls' Member Only workout sessions and pitching clinics are also in full swing at SSBC.

The girls' softball Pre-Season Hitters' Workshops will be held Sunday evenings for four consecutive weeks, Feb. 23-March 16. This program has been designed to improve all aspects of a hitting. It is open to girls 10 and older who will be grouped according to age and ability.

Each player will pass through a series of hitting stations, each with a slightly different focus, in order to help improve and prepare them for the 2003 season. A variety of live pitching, soft toss, tee work, short toss, bunting and machine work will provide plenty of "swings" for every participant.

"Softball has become a very popular sport in our market," SSBC president/director Frank Niles, Jr. said. "We want to provide girls with the same opportunities for off-season training that boys have received here in the past. This is a great opportunity for girls to further develop their softball skills and get a head start on the spring season. We're very fortunate to have newly appointed Weymouth High School varsity coach, Kate Daley, conducting these workshops."

Structured Girls' Members Only workouts, under the direction of coaches Niles and Daley, are being held Wednesday evenings, 6:30 to 8 p.m., now through April 16.

Lectures, drills and a variety of indoor games are featured during these clinics. Girls of all ages are invited, provided that they are SSBC members. They may show-up unannounced to participate in as many, or as few, workouts as they choose. Players will be grouped by age for drills and competition.

The second of three one-hour softball pitching sessions (five consecutive Sunday mornings at 9, 10, 11 or 12), offered by veteran instructor Barry "No Hit" Needham to girls 10 and older, is scheduled for Feb. 9-Mar. at SSBC.

(Pitchers must provide their own catchers.)

"Barry's one of best softball pitching instructors in New England," Niles added. "He focuses on the mechanics and basics of the windmill style of pitching. "His calm manner and concentration on fundamentals has helped many young pitchers launch promising softball careers."

Families today are in search of much needed care for their senior family members. Yet, they know that the institutional environment of a nursing home that focuses on ailments and infirmities is not always a good choice. There is a better senior living alternative—Sunrise Assisted Living.

Here, in a beautiful homelike setting, residents enjoy supportive health care for all the realities of advanced age and the promise of new friendships, too. Sunrise is a positive and lively senior living option, where quality of life is as great a priority as good physical care. And... Sunrise is significantly less expensive than a nursing home. A truly better value and a better life.

penalty box for a misconduct. At 14:13, Carver scored on a wrist shot over goalie Stefan Parnell's right shoulder.

That would be as close as the Crusaders would come for the rest of the game.

Cohasset would pick up the pressure and keep the puck in the Carver zone and eventually score at the 7:53 mark to go ahead 3-1. That would be Michael Rasmussen's first of two goals on the period. The Skippers would strike four more times before the period was over to take a 7-1 lead going into the third period.

Matt Davis, Matt O'Connell, and Ted Straughn capped off the dominating second period.

"We did a great job of moving the puck around the ice, we just had great motion all around," noted coach Blake. "The guys were out there rooting for each other and playing great as a team. It was nice to see."

Cohasset would get two more goals in the final period, the first from Mike Devine and the second from Mark Bouchard. Matt Davis led the team with four points on the night, one goal and three assists, and Michael Rasmussen had three points on two goals and one assist.

Cohasset improved to 10-6-3 overall on the season and won the South Shore League crown with a final 9-1-2 mark to beat out second place finishers Norwell (6-3-3) and Abington (7-4-1).

"This is the level of play that I hope Cohasset hockey can maintain now," said Blake after the game. "If tonight's team shows up for the tournament, we will be a very dangerous team."

The Skippers were scheduled to play their final regular season game last night against Blue Hills.

Seedings and brackets will be released by the MIAA on Sunday, with games to begin on Tuesday.

Lady Skippers sink Pirates in finale

By Lou Molinari
CORRESPONDENT

The Cohasset High girls basketball team went out on a winning note that could carry on to a sweet song next season.

Come next season, coach Ellen Carr's team will feature four very promising juniors and one sophomore that could explode on the scene.

The winning note that's still echoing through Cohasset took place last week when the Lady Skippers turned back Hull, 53-40. It was a little get even time for the Skippers who were beaten by 14 points the last time the two teams met.

When Cohasset takes revenge, it really takes revenge. Not only did Hull lose the game, it also lost the game it needed to qualify for the tournament.

Don't mess with the Skippers.

There was more. Hull's Christine Sampson, a senior, was looking to end her career with her 1,000th career point. In her prior game, Sampson scored 29 points and Cohasset was looking to button her down in the finale. The Skippers held Sampson to 24 points, one point more than Christine needed to make the 1,000.

Senior Lindsay Grossman was the leading scorer for Cohasset with 15 points. She was also named to the all-star team, her second consecutive year for that honor. Lindsay averaged 11 points per game this season.

Other seniors who closed out their high school hoop career included La'Raine Langford, heather Peraino and Maura O'Brien. Langford averaged six points, with four assists and six steals. Peraino, who missed six games due to an injury, had two three-pointers against Hull. Maura O'Brien was one of the top rebounders over the season.

The juniors who will be counted upon next year include Jenn Buckley, Ashley Faber, Danielle Pinkus and Caitlin Gontarz.

Buckley averaged 5.5 points per game, and looks like a very good player; according to coach Carr.

"She's our go-to-player," noted the veteran coach. "We will see a lot of her next season."

Faber, a center, is awesome under the boards, while Pinkus is a three-year starter who averaged seven points and six rebounds per game this season.

Gontarz has been coming along, playing half the season with the junior varsity and the other with the varsity.

Sophomore Nicole Whitney also did the half-and-half routine and looked good.

The sophomore Carr is extremely high on is Casey Anderson.

"She's the most improved player on the team," said Carr. "She plays with a lot of intensity and she's a power forward. She should be awesome next year."

The coach added: "What the team needs most is a lot of shooting time during the off-season. This team has a very good defense, but it needs help on offense. A little extra work could prove very beneficial."

A DAY OF HARMONY Thursday, February 27th, 2003

COMMUNITY NEWSPAPER COMPANY
Newspapers in Education Program

Creating Healthy Dialogues in school and at home...

...will help students: Respect and be respected,

Understand and be understood, and ally with each other for justice

Facilitating Dialogues:

The Day of Harmony 2003 television program, to be aired commercial-free by WB56 on Thursday, February 27th from 11am-Noon, will be beamed into hundreds of classrooms throughout New England. The show will focus on promoting diversity and ending bigotry and hatred. After viewing the program, it will be helpful to provide students with opportunities (at school and at home) where they can:

- Reflect on their reactions to the program
- Have a chance to talk about their personal experiences of diversity
- Discuss issues brought up in the program with other students
- Join or plan community projects to promote respect, understanding, and justice

Suggested Questions:

- What feelings came up for you as you viewed the program?
- What themes stood out for you?
- What instances of bullying or discrimination have you experienced, witnessed, or heard about?
- Have you ever felt pressure or seen others pressured to act a certain way in order to be accepted? If so, in what ways?
- What kinds of things can you and other students do to counter racism, sexism, homophobia, and other forms of prejudice and discrimination in your school, home and/or community?

COMMUNITY NEWSPAPER COMPANY · BOSTON Herald · WB56 BOSTON · esr · ira · TEAM HARMONY FOUNDATION

It is often hard for people to discuss controversial subjects, especially when they touch their lives so personally. Discussions about racism, sexism, homophobia, bigotry and hatred can sometimes turn into heated arguments. Review the following chart with students prior to starting the discussion and ask them to remind each other to follow practices that move us forward in constructive ways. This can help turn destructive arguments into healthy dialogue.

Talking With Each Other: Behaviors that...

Set us Back	Move us Forward
Using a loud, harsh tone of voice	Say or show you're upset without raising your voice
Interrupting	Let the other person finish a point before you start to speak.
Changing the subject	Stick to each point until you've worked it through.
Using insults, put-downs, and sarcasm	Treat the other person with respect, especially when you disagree. Disagree with ideas instead of attacking people.
Exaggerating ("That's crazy and sick," "Everyone thinks...," "You always...")	Avoid generalizations. Describe specific behaviors that anger you instead of blaming groups.
Using provocative slang (often times used in popular music), including the use of the slang of another cultural group in a perceived mimicking way	Avoid slang words that originate in violence and disrespect.
Using pushy or threatening body language Touching or getting too close to others	Use calm hand motions. Don't touch (unless you are sure it is welcome). Respect each other's space.
Talking fast, rushing. Not sharing air time with others	Pause before responding. Give others a chance to comment on what they have heard.
Faking it or making it up if you don't know something	Try saying " I don't know," or, "I'm not sure," or, "I think x because...," or "I believe y because..."
Sticking to your point, even if you begin to agree with something someone else said	Look for and acknowledge areas of agreement. Try saying, "I agree with you that..." Know that it's ok to change your mind and show you are open to new ideas
Thinking only of your next point, instead of listening to and thinking about the ideas being presented by others	Listen carefully and seriously to the views of others. Show that you're listening by checking to see if you're interpreting what they're saying accurately. Ask questions to deepen your understanding of their point of view. Slow down sometimes and require that each person reflect back what they've heard before responding.
Thinking the goal is to beat the opponent	Decide that the goal is to share ideas and consider different perspectives.

- Facilitating a healthy dialogue is just one way of helping students as they form relationships with others and sort out issues in their lives. We invite you to visit www.esrnational.org and http://www.teamharmony.org where you'll find more information on the Day of Harmony, questions which can help spark constructive dialogues, detailed lesson plans, and ideas for helping students counter bullying, discrimination, harassment, and hate crimes.

IT'S HAPPENING

Quilt show sure cure for winter doldrums

Spring will be arriving a little early this year, along with the 10th Annual Quilt Show & Luncheon in Cohasset on Friday, Feb. 28 and Saturday, March 1. More than 55 beautiful quilts will be on display at the Second Congregational Church on Highland Avenue on Friday afternoon, from 1- 4 p.m. and Saturday from 10:30 a.m. to 2 p.m.

Originally conceived as an idea to help brighten up what can often be the dullest time of year, the Quilt Show has grown over the years. "The Saturday Show and Luncheon is almost always a sold-out event," notes Carol Sandblom, one of the event's original organizers. "That's why we've added the Friday showing this year."

The Saturday Show includes a sit-down luncheon where volunteers serve homemade strata, salad and a selection of desserts. "We decorate the tables with linens and beautiful flowers to help bring a hint of spring to the midst of winter," Sandblom added. "And tickets are just $10 for the luncheon and show on Saturday."

"We've always had such a tremendous response from people willing to share their quilts, we've never shown the same quilt twice."

— Carol Sandblom, an organizer

Those that can't make the Saturday luncheon should be sure to stop by the church Friday afternoon. Tickets for the Friday showing are just $5 at the door.

"We've displayed more than 550 different quilts here over the last 10 years," said Sandblom. "We've always had such a tremendous response from people willing to share their quilts, we've never shown the same quilt twice."

The quilts displayed come from all over the South Shore and beyond, and each quilt has its own story which is shared in the show's program. "Hydrangea Basket", a "3-D Quilt" by Dorris Carrol of Marshfield, will be on display. The quilt features beautiful fabric petals hand-sewn onto the quilt squares.

The Scituate Senior Center Quilters will also be proudly displaying "Flower Fantasy", the result of the group's weekly meetings.

This event has proved to be a successful fundraiser over the years, raising more than $15,000 for charity. All proceeds will again be shared between the Pediatric AIDS Charitable Trust and Boston Medical Center's Reach Out and Read Program.

Tickets for the Saturday Show and Luncheon should be bought in advance at the Second Congregational Church next to Cohasset's Town Hall on Highland Avenue. Stop by the church office from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Monday to Friday, or call (781) 383-0345 for more information.

'Relay For Life' meeting Feb. 25

Hundreds of area residents have taken up the fight against cancer by taking part in the American Cancer Society's Relay For Life. The volunteer planning committee for the Society's seventh annual Relay For Life in Cohasset is hosting a kickoff for new team captains and interested participants from 7-8 p.m., Tuesday, Feb. 25 at the South Shore Community Center, 3 North Main St., Cohasset.

Relay For Life is the Society's signature activity taking place in more than 3,800 communities nationwide. This unique, overnight event raises cancer awareness while serving as a celebration for cancer survivors, a memorial for loved ones lost, and a rally for the community. Deer Hill students open their hearts

Two projects coincide with Valentine's Day

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

In the weeks leading up to Valentine's Day, many students at Deer Hill School got a chance to show just how big their hearts really are.

In what was deemed the "Have a Heart" scarf drive, fourth-graders made about 170 scarves for the Plymouth County Coalition for the Homeless. Meanwhile, fifth-graders participated in a "Random Acts of Kindness" program, where students were rewarded for three good deeds with an ice cream party.

"It makes me feel good that I'm doing something for the homeless."
— Jennifer Curley

The two projects were an offshoot of the school's "character education" program, aimed at teaching students the meanings of important values like honesty, respect, and compassion.

The idea for the scarf drive came from fourth-grade teacher Suzi Corkhum, whose friend informed her she was collecting clothes for the homeless.

"She was asking for donations and I thought it would be a great program for the school," Corkhum said.

Fabric to make the scarves was purchased with money donated by parents. The students wrapped the scarves in tissue paper with a valentine card and a candy jar before sending them off.

"It's important to do things like this because we're a global society and were all connected. You can never start learning that at too young an age," Corkhum said. "(The students are) able to really see what empathy is rather than just that big word."

Terence Durkin and Jennifer Curley are students in one of the six fourth-grade classes that participated in the project. "I just liked it. It was fun to help the homeless," said Terence.

"It was fun. I just liked cutting and wrapping it up. It makes me feel good that I'm doing something for the homeless," said Jennifer.

In the "Random Acts of Kindness" program, fifth-grade students recorded their good deeds on paper hearts that were displayed in the school hallway.

"We're trying to get the kids to do things for each other without being asked or expecting something in return," said teacher Kathy Jordan, who noted acts ranged from taking out the trash to setting the table to "all those kinds of things kids normally don't like to do."

Jordan said parental involvement played a key role in the success of the program. "Without the parents' support, we never could have done it," she said.

A room filled with candy-snacking fifth graders last Friday revealed a wide array of kind acts that were performed in the past two weeks, from one student who brought in the groceries and emptied the dishwasher to another who shoveled his driveway and even bought his teacher some Elvis-shaped chocolates.

"It makes me feel good when I'm doing something for someone else," said fifth-grader Chris Brown.

Carli Haggerty and John Currier work together making scarves for the homeless as part of a fourth-grade project at Deer Hill.

"I thought it was caring. You feel good about yourself when you do it," added classmate Sarah Libby.

Charitable acts are nothing new at Deer Hill. Art teacher Ann Berman worked with about 60 students, parents and staff who knitted more than 150 hats this fall for Rosie's Place, a local homeless shelter. Also, for the past three years, librarian Marjorie Murphy and custodian Ted Holland have organized donations during the winter holidays to a Lakota Sioux reservation in South Dakota.

Murphy seemed to speak for all the staff at Deer Hill when she summed up why charitable projects were so valuable to the school. "It's nice to see that the kids learn by doing," she said. "That's important."

Pilgrim Arena offers scholarships

This is the 30th consecutive year that the Pilgrim Skating Arena is awarding scholarships to area high school seniors planning to further their education.

Interested seniors must pick up and sign for the application in person at the arena pro shop. Completed applications must be returned by Monday, March 31.

Marshfield painter keeps work fresh 'through the years'

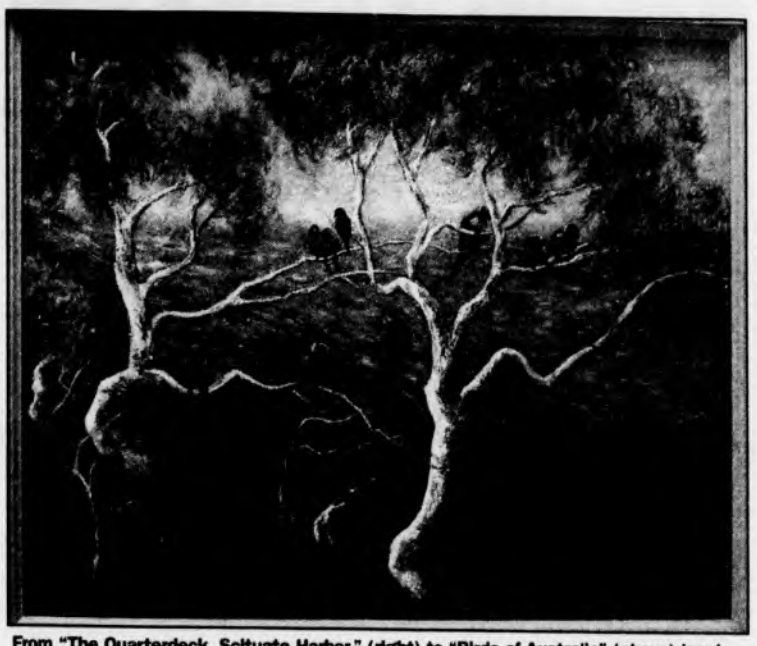
By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

Marshfield painter June Angier has had one main approach to her work through the years— the only constant is change.

Throughout a long career, Angier has tried to keep her work fresh and interesting by constantly changing her style and media — from oils and inks to acrylics — as well as her focus of subjects varying from ships, florals, other still lifes, to landscapes, portraits and more. An impressive display of this diversity is on view in the artist's exhibit, "Paintings Through the Years," at the Ventress Library in Marshfield through March 29.

STAFF PHOTOS/SUSAN HANEY

By using new mediums and a constant variety of subjects, Marshfield artist June Angier is always reinventing herself and her artwork.



From "The Quarterdeck, Scituate Harbor," (right) to "Birds of Australia" (above) local and not-so-local color makes up June Angier's Ventress Library show "Paintings through the Years."

"I paint mostly in oil, ink and acrylic, but try to improve these media for new styles and effects constantly," said Angier in her artist's comment. "I do a wide variety of subjects as everything interests me. Art is in all my thinking, and there is certainly a lot of thinking when you are creating."

Angier, originally from Newton, began her artistic career as far back as the early 1940s, when she attended Newton's Mount Ida College studying art and business. She was honored with an Alumni Achievement Award in The Field of Arts at the college in 1966, and then almost a decade later in 1975, when the late Cardinal Medeiros placed her portrait of the late Pope Paul, titled "Peace," in a school in Jamaica Plain.

More recently, Angier has had selected works of her specialty, oil portraits, put on current display at Jordan Hospital in Plymouth, and at Harvard Pilgrim Health Care in Norwell (in honor of its founder, Dr. Samuel Stewart). Along with the North River Arts Society, the artist is also currently a member of Boston's Copley Society and the Plymouth and Duxbury Art Associations and has taught oil painting in her own home studio for the past 25 years.

June Angier's painting "Jamaican Ladies" won the Best In Show award at the Cohasset Art Festival in 1997.

Oil portraits are among Angier's most candid and noteworthy pieces in her Ventress show. The subjects of them range from the youngster in "Nick Cyr of Weymouth, MA" and the picturesque, sandy-blonde, unnamed young woman in "Splendor In the Sun" to the patchy, oil-and-acrylic rendering of "Einstein." The artist also shows a taste for strikingly uncommon subjects, such as the double portrait "Jamaican Ladies," which won the Best In Show award at the Cohasset Art Festival in 1997.

Wildlife of various forms is also a subject to which Angier is drawn, represented in this show by the elegant, snow-and-woodlands-background portrait of "Wolf," the grazing horse of "'Fly So Free' Three Chimneys Farm, Kentucky" and the tropical, multi-colored oceanside view of "Birds of Australia." Diversifying even further, the artist's ship rendering, "'Square Rigger' Antique Cpy. — British" displays a fine, textbook eye for line and tone detail, and "The General Store" portrays its Northern New England title subject in a quaint, light-snowfall, horse-at-the-hitching-post scene.

Angier's various landscape pieces capture elegant rural and wilderness scenes in Maine, Massachusetts and Vermont.

"I like to jump around between subjects and techniques as much as I can," she said.

'Idol' thoughts on reality television

By Gregory Mathis
GMATHIS@CNC.COM

For those of us living in the real world, reality television couldn't be further from the truth.

How many of us have been stranded on a deserted island with total strangers, forced to ration rice and drink juice from coconuts? How many bachelors out there have 30 women parading around in skimpy swimsuits beating down their door to be their bride?

Which brings us to the latest calamity in reality television, Bridezilla. If the inventor of the camcorder knew it was going to lead to this, he probably would have just scrapped the idea of putting hand-held cameras in the possession of amateurs.

For those of you who are couch potatoes, it should come as no surprise that reality TV has taken over the airwaves. If you look at the television ratings week to week, the top shows are reality-based.

"American Idol" has risen to the top of the reality-based genre with its winning recipe for success. Take one part Coca-Cola, one part Ford Focus, add a pinch of snitty Brit Simon Cowell, and you have a show American viewers are tuning into in record numbers. Millions and millions of people call each week to vote for their favorite performers. With numbers like that, it's not just teenage girls going gaga over the show.

While the purpose of the show is to discover great, new talent, the bad performances are far more entertaining and humorous, especially with Simon "Scowl" imparting his pompous words of wisdom on these unsuspecting wannabes. Fortunately lightweight judges Paula Abdul and Randy Jackson are at Simon's side to soften the blow.

"American Idol" improves on the original "Star Search," the one-time popular show that produced stars such as Leanne Rhimes, Drew Carey, Justin Timberlake, Britney Spears; Christina Aguilera, and Alanis Morresette. The latest revival of this one-time classic is ABC's attempt to ride the coattails of "America Idol"'s success, but it falls as flat as some of the notes coming from the performers. The host, Arsenio Hall, is old news, and the judges are washed up performers who lack personality. Like "American Idol," the viewing public is invited to vote on the performers. Unlike "American Idol," you have about two minutes to log onto your computer to vote during commercial breaks. When are you supposed to have time to go to the bathroom and get to the refrigerator for another cold beverage? Get real!

ABC's Bachelorette Trista was is set to pick her man this week.

Last year's American Idol finalists including winner Kelly Clarkson wow the crowd.

Survivor Amazon guys make their way along the balance beam in the first immunity challenge of the sixth installment of the popular reality show.

When television producers aren't searching for the next superstar, they're playing matchmaker.

Get as many shallow men or women together, give them one shallow object of desire to pursue, and see how many shallow people will watch. By most accounts, Americans are as shallow as they come. Viewers hang on every grunt coming from Joe Millionaire, or every cleavage-showing shot from the women chasing the man or the men chasing the woman. Cleavage, as we know, is very popular with American viewers. How real the cleavage is is another story.

For those who can't get enough cleavage, the creators of The Bachelor on ABC is attempting to titillate us even more with the airing last week of "Are You Hot?: The Search for America's Sexiest People." You know this reality smut is getting serious when ABC jumps into the fray. You expect this kind of programming from Fox, but ABC is the respected network that's home to Monday Night Football, Peter Jennings and wholesome Disney programming. But when you've fallen as far as ABC has, apparently anything goes. Parading "hot" bodies across the "boob" tube seems to be their answer to their declining number of viewers.

Like Fox, CBS seems to have a winning formula for reality TV. The newest "Survivor" pits the men against the women in an all out battle of the sexes. It'll be interesting to see how this season plays out in the dangerous Amazon region. Producers are trying to keep the game fresh, but after six seasons, it's getting a little more difficult.

Survivor is fresher and far more interesting than some of the other reality options, like Fear Factor. Being forced to eat bugs or letting snakes crawl all over you isn't scary, it's gross. It should be called Gross Factor, but then again it wouldn't have the alliteration the genius creators came up with when naming the show.

If Fear Factor isn't gross enough for you, you can always tune in to see how man stacks up against beast. Ever wonder if a skinny Oriental man can chow down more hot dogs than a bear? You'll relish this show. And to settle once and for all who is stronger, an elephant or a team of midgets, "Man Vs. Beast" rounded up more midgets than we've seen on screen since the Munchkin scene in "The Wizard of Oz" to see who could pull an airplane the farthest. You can't call the producers of this show shortsighted.

Meet My Folks is another reality show that toys with our reality. Who would want their parents to pick their next mate? Even though we'd like to hook our potential dates up to a lie detector machine, who would ever hire that creepy guy that gives the thumbs up or the thumbs down when the parents ask the girls questions about their past sexual encounters or their intentions with momma's little boy? Hook that guy up to the machine and let's see who's lying.

And who needs television cameras in people's homes so we can see how they live? Are we that interested in the

Potato soup

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Everyone knows that soups make quick and easy dinners yet most of us stick to the run-of-the-mill variations such as vegetable, chicken noodle, or tomato. Few of us have made potato soup, a staple of many cuisines, which is hearty and, if well made, also complex. The problem is achieving just the right texture - creamy rather than slippery - as well as enhancing flavors so that the soup does not turn out bland.

The first issue was the selection of the potatoes. I tried low starch (red), medium starch (all-purpose and Yukon gold), as well as high starch (russet) potatoes. The red potatoes were the worst of the lot - they didn't offer enough body to the soup and their texture was 'slippery.' In addition, their sweet flavor was not enough of a balance to the heavy cream. Next, I tried all-purpose and they were too bland. The texture was decent but the flavor was unremarkable. Yukon golds, if you enjoy their distinctive flavor and yellow color, were good (I find their strong and slightly unusual flavor to be a bit overpowering for this recipe) but the russets offered the most body and their earthiness was a welcome addition to what could be a very dull main course recipe. This recipe needs big potato flavor and the russets deliver.

The onion is no surprise nor is the addition of leek as the pairing of potato and leek is a French classic. I had decided early on to use a balance of chicken stock and heavy cream and finally settled on 3 1/2 cups of stock to 1/2 cup heavy cream. I did not want to overpower the potatoes with too much dairy. I also tested half-and-half and light cream but the soup was too milky. The addition of one tablespoon of herbs to the soup while it simmers and then a healthy dose of raw herbs to garnish just before serving brightened the flavor considerably. I also tried adding a couple of tablespoons lemon juice but it tasted like anchovies in a slice of apple pie – definitely out of place. The only other unusual addition is just a 1/2 teaspoon of sugar which kicks up the flavor.

POTATO SOUP WITH LEEK AND CHIVES

Use russets for this soup since both red potatoes and all-purpose potatoes don't deliver enough flavor. This soup can be puréed for a more elegant version which is best done before the cream is added. Try using tarragon with this soup for a more interesting flavor combination.

2 tablespoons butter
1 tablespoon olive oil
1 medium onion cut into 1/4-inch dice, about 1 1/2 cups
1 large leek, white part only, cut into 1/4-inch dice, about 1 cup
1 1/2 pounds potatoes, russet or Yukon gold preferred, peeled and cut into 1/2 inch dice (about 3 russets or 4 Yukon gold)
1/2 teaspoon sugar
3 1/2 cups chicken stock, homemade or Swanson0s preferred
1/2 cup heavy cream
1 tablespoon fresh thyme, tarragon, or other herb
1/2 teaspoon salt or to taste
Freshly ground pepper to taste
1/4 cup finely chopped chives or parsley, for garnish

Heat the butter and olive oil in a large pot. Add onion and leek and cook, covered, over low heat for about 15 minutes, or until they are very soft but not browned. Add the potatoes, sugar, and stock and bring to a simmer. Cook, until the potatoes are tender about 25 minutes. Add the heavy cream and herbs and cook 5 minutes longer. Season with salt and pepper to taste. Garnish each serving with chives or parsley. Serves 4 life of Ozzy Osbourne and his foul-mouthed family? If you could understand what they were saying, it might be good. Between the slurred speech from the former Black Sabbath lead screecher and the lame interaction between family members, there's little substance to this family unit. Come to think of it, that's pretty real given the state of families in American today.

And who cares about Anna Nicole Smith? She's old news too. The former Playboy Playmate has ballooned to the size of Rosie O'Donnell and Oprah Winfrey and we really don't care what she's doing or how she's spending the old man's money.

I guess we have MTV to blame for all of this. The Real World, which aired for the first time back in the 1980s, successfully threw a bunch of college-age kids into a house and let them duke it out. Their discussions, battles and tears were caught on tape and the real life dramas that played out were far more interesting than any daytime soap opera.

And there appears to be no end in sight. Soon, America will be voting on which two strangers will marry in a new reality show that is sure to add to our nation's already staggering divorce rate.

Whatever happened to turning on the television to escape reality? Those days are long gone.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, FEB. 19

A social Libra moon forms harmonious contacts to Mercury, Jupiter and Neptune today. However, an applying polarity of Mars and Saturn urges you to face your responsibilities and fulfill promises you have made to others. Cool your heels; put the needs or demands of others on top of your 'to do' list. If you have been experiencing tension in a relationship, now is the time to make concessions and smooth things out. A kind word or thoughtful gesture will make all the difference.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 20

Mars opposes Saturn at 9:13 a.m., making for a rough start to this day. You may have to face the facts about a situation that has been troublesome and take action. On the other hand, this influence is prime for getting down to brass tacks and taking care of important business projects. You can be most productive. The moon travels in Libra, forming easy contacts to Pluto, Saturn and Mars this morning. Planetary action turns around completely this afternoon, as alignments of Mercury to Jupiter and Neptune take over. Social activities get the green light. Kick back and enjoy yourself. Don't take anything or anyone too seriously. The Libra moon aligns with Uranus at 11:29 p.m. and becomes inactive.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 21

At 1:09 a.m. the moon enters serious Scorpio, remaining there today and tomorrow. Mercury aligns with Neptune at 1:55 a.m., and the moon interacts with Mercury and Neptune this evening. That means that you should sleep on new ideas; don't take action today. Things may not be as they appear. On the other hand, this is an ideal time for developing creative projects. You can also make gains on an inner, spiritual level. Spend time alone. Look within for answers.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 22

The planet Saturn, standing at 22-degrees Gemini, begins direct travel at 2:40 a.m. Its influence may bring to light the facts about a situation, and help you to make realistic decisions. The green light goes on for new starts, particularly before 12:08 p.m. At this time the Scorpio moon forms a harmonious contact to Venus, making the morning prime for purchasing or selling property or handling financial matters. The remainder of the day rates high for getting things done. Keep your nose to the grindstone. Hard work will pay off.

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 23

Take a vacation from daily responsibilities and go with your fun-loving side. At 2:15 a.m. the Scorpio moon becomes inactive until 3:46 a.m., when it enters Sagittarius. The last quarter phase of the moon occurs at 11:46 a.m. A new moon will culminate next Sunday, March 2. Lunar alignments to Jupiter and Neptune generate optimism, enthusiasm. Concentrate on enjoying yourself and recharging your batteries.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 24

Although the moon travels in upbeat Sagittarius, there are a couple of pitfalls in today's planetary picture. Slow down and don't take risks. Use extra tact and diplomacy. The moon aligns with Pluto at 2:04 p.m., Saturn at 6:16 p.m. and Mars at 11:28 p.m. Channel high energy constructively. Stay busy with practical projects. Be more sensitive to the feelings of others. You can let off steam by spending extra time with exercise programs or participating in sports.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 25

The Sagittarius moon aligns with Uranus at 6:50 a.m and becomes inactive. A pragmatic Capricorn moon takes over at 8:11 a.m., beginning a period that tops the charts for productivity. Take on a full work agenda. This is also an excellent time to make practical decisions, sign important contracts, launch business ventures. Take advantage of above-average influences and plan to work or study late into the evening.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 26

Read yesterday's advice. The moon continues to travel in Capricorn, active throughout the day. In addition, Mercury forms harmonious contacts to Pluto today and Saturn on Friday. This influence is ideal for handling projects that require study, investigation or research. You can cut through obstacles and get to the heart of a matter. The green light for new starts remains on.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 27

Get an early start to this day. Plan to initiate new activities before 7:58 a.m., when the Capricorn moon aligns with Venus and becomes inactive. Handle routine chores and finish projects already begun until 2:24 p.m., when the moon enters Aquarius. The remainder of the day rates high for new beginnings in your business or personal life. An applying alignment of Mercury and Saturn aids jobs that require mental precision and attention to detail. You can get work projects out of the way in short time.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 28

The Aquarius moon aligns with Jupiter at 8:41 a.m. and Neptune at 12:05 p.m., generating an upbeat, easygoing mood. Don't take on more than you can handle. Avoid making impulsive purchases, promises. This is a wonderful day for vacationing, enjoying favorite sports, hobbies, friends. Take extra time out for yourself; kick back, relax and enjoy life to the fullest.

The basics of seed sowing

Green thumbs up

Part 2

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

During a memorable winter season of relentless bitter cold temperatures and incessant snowstorms, the days seem to creep along for those who yearn to till the soil. For enthusiastic gardeners, weather conditions play a prominent and continuous role in our hobby as we monitor the effects of temperature, rainfall, wind, and sunlight throughout the year. From droughts to flooding downpours, severe cold or excessive heat, we often become obsessed with the environmental conditions that both threaten and nurture our beloved plants. Memories of last winter's drought and this season's frigid temperatures and snowy interludes are sure to linger for years to come.

Despite the serenity of our recent snowfalls, the dormant winter landscape offers only a pen and ink sketch of the secret beauty hidden beneath Old Man Winter's snowy covering. We long for Mother Nature's kaleidoscopic artwork of multicolored flowers splashed against a soft green grass canvas accompanied by the sweet perfume of springtime blossoms and singing birds. Many northern residents are headed south in search of warmer temperatures and tropical vegetation. For those unable to escape to milder climes, a visit to the Rhode Island Spring Flower Show, February 20-23, at the Rhode Island Convention Center in Providence, should offer that desperately needed early glimpse of the springtime glory that will eventually be ours to enjoy. Visit the show's web site at www.flowershow.com for ticket information and a schedule of lectures, demonstrations, and workshops.

In preparation for spring's arrival, the time has come to assemble supplies for starting seeds. While the majority of my seeds come from catalog sources, I make an effort each season to collect several varieties of annuals, biennials and perennials from my own garden. Cleome, poppies, salvia, angel's trumpet (Datura), forget-me-nots (Myosotis), foxgloves (Digitalis), columbines (Aquilegia), and balloon flower (Platycodon) are just a few of the seeds tucked away in canisters each fall. In addition, several plastic bags filled with daylily seeds, which are the result of personal hybridization efforts, have been labeled and refrigerated, awaiting sufficient time to initiate the germination process.

Seed packets purchased from outside sources usually print germination requirements on the back of the package but a reference book on seed propagation is helpful to ensure success. Two references I keep handy are Park's Success with Seeds published by the Park Seed Company and Seed Sowing and Saving by Carole B. Turner. These books contain valuable information on seed viability, germination times, temperature and light requirements and special treatments that may be required for certain varieties.

Despite the serenity of our recent snowfalls, the dormant winter landscape offers only a pen and ink sketch of the secret beauty hidden beneath Old Man Winter's snowy covering.

Seed-starting supplies are readily acquired locally and should include containers, growing medium, labels, a spray bottle, and possibly some form of heating cable or warming mat to supply bottom heat for seeds that require warmer temperatures for germination. Large, clear plastic bags or seed-starting kits with plastic domes are advantageous. Should you lack brightly lit, sunny exposures inside your home, grow lights or a fluorescent light fixture may be necessary to provide supplemental light essential for strong, stocky growth. A liquid soluble fertilizer should be purchased to provide dilute feedings once seedlings are actively growing to ensure husky, robust plants.

A wide range of containers can be used for seed starting, the only major requirement being that the containers have drainage holes. Flats or pots approximately 2 1/2 to 3 inches deep are ideal as they provide adequate room for root growth and prevent drying out. Large trays with individual cells for each seed can be purchased with or without growing medium; these are ideal for sowing larger seeds. I prefer empty containers, as the starting medium in pre-filled trays is often difficult to moisten properly due to a high percentage of peat in the mix.

The most important aspect of successfully sowing seeds indoors is to purchase a suitable growing medium. The ideal medium for starting seeds is a sterile, soilless mixture of peat, perlite and/or vermiculite. Purchase ready-made mixes formulated for growing seeds such as Jiffy Mix or Metro Mix for best results. Avoid using garden soil. Even many sterile potting soils tend to be too heavy for sowing seeds unless additional peat and perlite are added to create a light, airy, porous mixture.

Once the essential supplies and seed packets have been acquired, carefully read the instructions on the back of the seed packets or consult catalogs and books to enable you to prepare a timetable for starting your seeds. Be sure to date your seed packets if they have not been stamped with the year of production. Do not start seeds earlier than recommended. Perennials tend to grow more slowly and can be started up to 12 week before the last frost. Most annuals and vegetables should wait until six to eight weeks prior to Memorial Day to be sown. Seedlings are best transplanted to their final location before they are budded or flowering. Very little is gained and much can be lost by sowing seeds too early or rushing to transfer seedlings into the ground.

Outside my window, the leaves of the rhododendrons remain tightly furled under steely gray skies as another winter storm approaches. Despite this gloomy forecast, the springtime songs of birds can be heard resonating from the treetops high above the frozen, snow-covered landscape. Their cheerful melodies offer the promise that other signs of springtime may soon

LISTEN To Life

by John Klefeker, BC-HIS
Board Certified-Hearing Instrument Specialist, MA Lic. #127

VOICE RECOGNITION

A device recently approved by the FDA gives new meaning to the phrase "tune out." This new type of hearing instrument has the ability to automatically turn up the volume when it detects a human voice. If it picks up background noises, on the other hand, the device automatically lowers the sound level. Less background noise helps reduce the fatigue commonly encountered among users of hearing instruments. This hearing instrument comes in a non-directional model, which is equally sensitive to sounds coming from all directions. It may also be purchased as a directional model, which is more sensitive to sounds coming from the listener's front. This is one hearing instrument of which people with good hearing might be envious.

At FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER, one of our most important jobs is to keep up to date on the latest technological advances in hearing instruments. If it has been determined that a hearing aid will be of benefit to you, let us help in the selection of the one that is right for you and your lifestyle. Our testing equipment is state-of-the-art, and we welcome you or anyone in your family to come see us for an evaluation. Our new expanded facilities are located in Weymouth at 534 Main Street (Rt. 18), across from the Stetson Bldg., where we carry a full range of hearing instruments. PH: 781-337-1144.

P.S. Directional hearing instruments make it easier for wearers to identify the location of sounds.

Deadly nightclub inferno claims life of Cohasset man

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

The Rhode Island nightclub inferno that killed 97 patrons last week has tragically hit home, claiming the life of a Cohasset man, Carlton L. "Bud" Howorth, III. He was 39.

Howorth attended the fateful rock concert at The Station in West Warwick with his companion, Donna Reis, whom he assisted to safety in the moments before his death.

A memorial service for Howorth will be held today (Thursday) at 4 p.m. at the Second Congregational Church on Cohasset Common.

Howorth's family moved to Cohasset from Weymouth when he was five years old. He grew up attending Cohasset Public Schools and graduated from Cohasset High School in 1981. At the time of his death, Howorth was living in Norton and working as a technology support manager at Ciber Corp. in Woburn.

Family members remembered Howorth as a loving father who enjoyed sports, the outdoors, and computers.

"He was a likeable person," said his father, Carlton Howorth, Jr. of Fair Oaks Lane during an interview Wednesday morning with the Mariner. "Everybody loved him."

Family members said Howorth and Reis were on the left side of the concert stage when a pyrotechnics display put on by the group Great White ignited the fire at The Station.

"If he was going to go to a concert, he had to be up close," said his sister, Diane Dooley of Buttonwood Lane. "He loved music. He loved rock n' roll because he grew up in that era."

The Station, a popular West Warwick nightspot, became totally engulfed in flames within three minutes when the on stage pyrotechnics display put on by the group Great White ignited highly flammable sound insulation.

Some 300 people are estimated to have been packed into the nightclub, many apparently unaware that what was unfolding around them was a fast-moving fire and not part of the heavy metal band's act.

Family members said Howorth and Reis noticed the fire quickly but were caught in the mix of people pushing to get to an exit. They said Howorth tried to calm people around him, telling them not to push or panic. The couple gave up on trying to get to the front door when they saw how backed up it was. The two ventured into another room, where Howorth gave Reis a giant push that enabled her to get to a window and escape. Howorth, however, did not emerge behind her.

Reis was released from the hospital the day after the fire with severe third-degree burns on her hands.

Dooley said Howorth's three-year-old daughter, Elizabeth,

A new chapter at library

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library sits like a classic novel that's been rebound and fit with a new cover.

After a year of renovations to the building that formerly housed the Osgood School, the library is ready to take root in its new facility. The new library will be dedicated during an open house Sunday and will open for business Monday.

"We're very excited," said Patience Towle, chairwoman of the Library Trustees. "Everyone in Cohasset will be able to come together in a new community environment."

Towle said the new facility has provided an additional 6,000-square-feet of breathing room for the library, almost doubling the square footage of its previous home on South Main Street. That, combined with the fact that things are much easier to manage now because everything is located on one floor, will mean the library will be able to play a much bigger role in the community.

"We anticipate more than doubling the activity here," said Towle.

The idea for a new library surfaced five years ago, when trustees realized the old library would not accommodate the growing need for expansion. The trustees acquired the old Osgood School at fall Town Meeting in 1998. A $1.5 million state grant, more than $1.1 million in donations and $725,000 from the sale of the old library helped pay for the cost of renovations.

A quick tour of the library this week showed all that money was certainly put to good use.

The library's reading room has 12 carrels with computers that are connected to the Internet and reference databases. The new computers are a giant improvement upon the three computers at the old library which needed to be signed-out by the half hour. The computers will now house much of the library's expanding reference section.

"What we save by not having to replace reference material helps pay for the cost of operating the computers," said library trustee Roger Whitley.

The reading room's tall Palladian windows have been enlarged and the reference bookcases in the room have been kept low to create a sense of openness. Cherry paneling gives the building a traditional feel throughout.

"From an architectural standpoint, I think having this feeling of openness is really terrific," said Whitley. "Even though its a new library, to us, it's still has a great feeling of the old traditional space."

A new cupola on the building is another architectural highlight. The mackerel

Planners: house is detrimental

Recommends Zoning Board deny special permit for 3 Jerusalem Lane

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Planning Board members say the 5,000-square-foot mansion at 3 Jerusalem Lane devalues neighboring properties and should not be granted a special permit.

In the latest decision regarding the controversial mansion, the Planning Board voted last week to recommend that the Zoning Board deny the owners' application for a special permit. Pursuant to the zoning bylaw, the board said, the home should not be granted the permit because it has devalued surrounding properties and eliminated many of their views of the ocean, making it substantially more detrimental to the neighborhood than the 1,500 square foot ranch that it replaced.

The Zoning Board will make a final decision on the matter in a public hearing on March 17 at 7:30 p.m. in Town Hall.

The Planning Board decided on its recommendation at its meeting Wednesday night before a group of several upset neighbors. Neither owners Phil and Mary Anne Ayer nor their lawyer Roberta Sawyer were present.

In a story line that most, if not all, Cohasset residents are familiar with, the Ayers were told on Jan. 16 by the Zoning Board to

Elms Meadow Wellfield approved

The new wells installed last year by the Water Commission in the Ellms Meadow Wellfield have just been approved by the Department of Environmental Protection for use of up to 170,000 gallons per day.

"This is the 'green light' for us to go ahead with the reactivation of the wellfield," said John McNabb, Chairman of the Water Commission. "At the March 29 Annual Town Meeting the Water Commission will seek funding, along with other projects in our ongoing water system improvement program, to build a new pumphouse for the wellfield so we can get it on line."

"The DEP approval letter concluded that the quality of the water was generally good." said McNabb. "These wells can be used to help take the pressure off the Lily Pond Water Treatment Plant in times of high demand. While we have more than enough water available from the Aaron River Reservoir and Lily Pond for even the highest demand, a supplemental supply will still be very useful."

"Also, the well will provide, along with the Sohier Street Well that we expect to reactivate in a few years, a backup water supply to provide the town's minimum needs just in case the Lily Pond Water Treatment Plant can't be used for a period of time."

The Ellms Meadow Wellfield was used for public water supply purposes from 1897 until 1991, when the pipe connecting the wells to the distribution system was broken and not repaired. The Water Commission replaced the seven wellheads in 2001 and then conducted a pump test in 2002 according to state regulations.

Study shows need to reduce nutrient loading

A major study of the ecology of Lily Pond, Cohasset's public drinking water supply, has just been completed. The Lily Pond Limnology and Water's Edge Study, conducted by ENSR for the Water Commission, was partially funded by a grant from the Massachusetts Department of Environmental Management.

"This study shows, as we expected, that Lily Pond is in a eutrophic condition which impairs its use as a water supply because it is receiving too many nutrients from developed areas of the watershed," said John McNabb, Chairman of the Water Commission. "To improve drinking water quality and to preserve the integrity of the water supply we need to reduce this nutrient loading of the Pond," he said.

"For example," said McNabb, "the proposed discharge of 40,400 gallons a day of treated wastewater from the proposed Avalon development would exacerbate this problem because the effluent would contain nutrients like nitrates and phosphates, which is why the Water Commission has requested the ZBA to prohibit this discharge."

The study found that the most dominant symptom of the eutrophication of Lily Pond is the extremely dense coverage of rooted aquatic plants such as fanwort, a non-native invasive species. The study also found that a disproportionate share of these nutrients and other contaminants are generated in the Peppermint Brook watershed, due to urban land use and street runoff; and that reductions in the nutrient loading of Lily Pond are therefore needed.

"The Water Commission is strongly considering the recommendations of this important study," said McNabb. "For example, at the March 29 Annual Town Meeting we will seek funding to design and construct the recommended stormwater controls. The recommended reconstruction of our sludge lagoons is already in our long range capital improvements plan to be completed within the next few years. The proposed hydraulic dredging, as it is a much larger project, will take more consideration before the Water Commission can decide how to respond to that recommendation."

The Study recommended that the Water Commission consider hydraulic dredging of Lily Pond to reduce accumulated sediment that has reduced the maximum capacity of the Pond and which contributes to plant growth. An estimated 75,000 cubic yards of sediment was proposed to be removed from the northwest shoreline, with sediments dewatered near the Water Treatment Plant, and disposed offsite, for an estimated cost of about $1,450,000.

To reduce discharge of nutrients and other pollutants from the Lily Pond watershed into the Pond, the study recommended that the Water Commission develop an education package to inform homeowners in the watershed about environmentally sound applications of lawn chemicals and other beneficial household practices, and that the Commission design and construct storm water management devices, particularly in the Peppermint Brook watershed.

The study found that sediment has been discharged into the Pond from the Treatment Plant sludge lagoons and that while the sediment itself does not cause a water quality concern in the Pond, that the Commission should reconstruct the lagoons to stop this discharge from continuing.

The Study recommended that the Water Commission continue to carefully review all existing and future development plans within the watershed for consistency with protection of water quality in Lily Pond and also continue regular water quality monitoring of Lily Pond and two tributaries on a seasonal basis. The Study also recommended that the Commission purchase simple non-mechanical harvesting equipment for periodic maintenance for plant control around water intake area of the Treatment Plant, as needed.

The report is available for review at the Lily Pond Water Treatment Plant and at the Paul Pratt Memorial Library.

Open burning permits are issued for the disposal of brush, cane, driftwood and forestry debris. Burning shall be conducted on land proximate to the place of generation. Burning shall be conducted at a distance greater than 75 feet from any dwelling. Select a safe area with no ground cover. While burning the fire must be attended until completely extinguished. Have a water hose rake and shovel nearby for fire control.

Budget discussion set for today

The Board of Selectmen will meet tonight with the School Committee and the Advisory Committee to discuss the impact of cuts in local aid on the town's budget. The meeting will be at 7 p.m. in Town Hall. At the center of the discussion will be the specific cuts outlined in Gov. Romney's newly released state budget for fiscal year 2004. Selectmen must decide on an override amount by March 6 so Town Manager Mark Haddad can meet the posting requirements for the March 29 Town Meeting.

Study predicts student draw from Avalon

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

A study by AvalonBay Estates estimates that between 35 and 60 school-age children would be added to the Cohasset Public Schools as a result of the company's proposed 200-unit luxury apartment development.

The study was presented to the Zoning Board of Appeals on Monday night as part of an ongoing public hearing with Avalon, which is applying for a comprehensive permit under Chapter 40B, the state's affordable housing law. Under 40B, a developer can skirt most of a town's zoning regulations in exchange for providing a percentage of affordable housing.

Avalon gathered data for the study by looking at statistics from the state Department of Education and some of the company's other housing developments in Massachusetts.

Avalon representative Elizabeth Smith said there were four factors that contributed to how many school-age children an Avalon housing development typically produced: the building product type, the reputation of the local school system, the affordability component and the mix of one, two, and three bedroom apartments.

Smith said a garden-style development, as is planned for Cohasset, traditionally attracts more school-age children than a high-rise development. She said a development in a town with reputable schools attracts more school-age children than one in a town with poor schools. She said a development with mixed income apartments, which Avalon Cohasset would include, attracts ten times as many school-age children as one where all apartments are sold at market rate.

But the most important and telling factor, Smith said, was the apartment mix.

Using data from Avalon Lexington, Avalon Oaks and Oaks West in Wilmington and Avalon Orchards in Marlboro, the Avalon study calculated the average number of school-age children per apartment for four different groups.

The study found that:

- A two-bedroom affordable apartment produced 0.67 school-age children.
- A two-bedroom market-rate apartment produced 0.22 school-age children.
- A three-bedroom affordable apartment produced 1.46 school-age children.
- A three-bedroom market-rate apartment produced 0.72 school-age children.

Those averages were then applied to the proposed apartment mix for Avalon Cohasset, which calls for 58 one-bedroom, 120 two-bedroom and 22 three-bedroom apartments. The study assumed 25 percent of those units would be affordable.

The result was a high-end estimate of about 60 school-age children for the Avalon Cohasset development. Factoring in that 10 percent of children statewide go private school, and that people with children already attending Cohasset Public Schools may move in, the study said the number of children added to the school system by the development could be as low as 35.

Zoning Board Chairman Woody Chittick said the predictions seemed far more accurate than those proposed by Superintendent Edward Malvey two years ago.

Chittick said Malvey, assuming a 250-unit complex as opposed to a 200-unit one, claimed that between 168 and 268 children would be added to the schools, resulting in the need for eight more school buses, 17 more teachers and 17 more classrooms.

Chittick and other members of the Zoning Board discounted Malvey's estimates in the face of the Avalon data. Chittick said Malvey would also agree his estimates were not accurate.

Chittick relayed only one suggestion from Malvey to Avalon—that the development be designed so that a bus could enter and do an easy loop, preventing students from having to be picked up or dropped off on Route 3A.

At the end of the meeting, the Zoning Board adjusted its agenda so that the next Avalon hearing, scheduled for March 24, would address matters concerning the Planning Board.

The March 24 meeting was supposed to be an opportunity for the general public to voice overall concerns with the Avalon project, but that agenda will now be moved to the final Avalon hearing, tentatively scheduled for April 7.

The Planning Board was originally scheduled for this Monday's agenda but members asked for more time because Selectmen only recently approved the board's request for legal counsel.

The Planning Board's first dialogue with Town Counsel took the form of a conference call at its meeting last Wednesday night. The conversation revealed that the board will fight the Avalon project on the grounds that it is a serious threat to Cohasset's supply of drinking water.

Developers build case for senior housing

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Two new senior housing complexes may be coming to Cohasset, if the proposals garner the necessary town permits.

The Planning Board heard preliminary proposals last week from two residents who intend to build senior housing in town.

Wayne Sawchuk is looking to build 37 units of housing on a 12-acre lot he owns behind Shaw's supermarket. Meanwhile, a team of entrepreneurs led by David Calhoun is purchasing the 40-acre Hayes Estate off Beechwood Street with the intent of developing 100 to 160 units of upscale housing.

Both developments would be gated communities for independent seniors, age 55 and older. While neither facility would offer "assisted living," some individual units would be large enough to accommodate a live-in aide if one was needed.

The biggest difference between the two developments is their price tags. Calhoun estimated his units will sell for somewhere between $400,000 and $700,000; Sawchuk said his will cost only $175,000.

Calhoun, who lives on Sheldon Road, described his development as a "first-rate facility" that would be "more upscale" than the senior housing development on Pond Street. "You're really going to feel great when you walk into it," he said.

Calhoun and his partners envision a "service-driven community" where, for example, homeowners' lawns would be mowed by caretakers.

Units would likely have two floors, Calhoun said, with a master bedroom, a gourmet kitchen and a study on the first floor, and a second bedroom and a den on the second floor. Each unit would also probably have its own two-car garage.

Calhoun said homes would be "shingle-style" and would probably contain multiple units. He said he was considering asking for zoning relief of height limitations so he could create more units in less space.

Calhoun also said he would include the barn on the Hayes Estate as part of the development, perhaps using it to store residents' antique cars.

Calhoun and his partners went before the Planning Board looking for "assistance with accelerating" their project. Their goal, Calhoun said, was to have a model unit completed by the end of the year.

The Planning Board suggested that Calhoun consider making some of the housing affordable if he was interested in speeding up the permitting process. That way, the board said, he and his partners could apply for a comprehensive permit under Chapter 40B, the state's affordable housing law.

"We're doing what everybody in town needs. Everybody needs a place where they can eventually go and I think it would be a great asset to the town."
Developer David Calhoun

The board also suggested that since the Hayes Estate was divided into two parcels of land, Calhoun and his partners might be able do a "package development" where, on one parcel, a percentage of units were made affordable and, on the other, all units were sold at market value.

Calhoun was receptive to the board's ideas, saying he would further explore adding an affordable component to the project.

Planning Board members said the biggest obstacle to the project would be obtaining sewer capacity. "I don't see a lot of opposition to this," said board member Al Moore. "I think there's going to be a lot of positive support, which is important."

Calhoun said the housing would be a perfect fit for Cohasset residents who feel they can no longer take care of a big house or who are interested in moving their aging relatives nearby. "We're doing what everybody in town needs," he said. "Everybody needs a place where they can eventually go and I think it would be a great asset to the town."

Calhoun is now looking to meet with the Sewer Commission to discuss the issue of sewer capacity. He might be competing for that capacity, however, with Sawchuk, whose planned development of 37 units behind Shaw's supermarket would also need a sewer hookup.

Sawchuk, who lives on Beechwood Street, said his project would center around a mansion that would include 20 units of housing. The building would be have a wrap-around deck and would be much like the mansion at Sunrise Assisted Living on Route 3A, although not as big, he said.

Sawchuk is considering building facilities for a few small businesses — such as a hairdresser and a caterer —near the proposed entrance to the development off Pine Ridge Road. He also plans to construct pedestrian access to Shaw's.

Sawchuk expressed concern that the town's existing senior housing developments are too expensive for many people who have lived in Cohasset all their lives.

"In terms of Cohasset, this would be the most affordable thing," he said. "(Other senior living facilities) are really starting to get out of the price range for townies."

Planning Board member Peter Pratt was excited by the ideas for the two senior housing facilities and said they may allow the town to escape from other unwanted affordable housing proposals.

"We can hit the ball out of the park here," said Pratt. "If we make sure Mr. Calhoun's and Mr. Sawchuk's developments meet state mandates (for affordable housing), we can get out from under the sword of 40B."

A new chapter at Paul Pratt Memorial Library

weathervane that has been the library's symbol for a decade was placed atop the cupola after being repaired locally. Whitley said the building originally had a cupola when it was built in the 1920s but it was taken down by because it leaked.

Library patrons will find getting comfortable in the new facility is quite easy. Youngsters have a colorful children's room to take advantage of, as well as a story room where reading and arts and crafts projects will take place. Middle-schoolers can seek haven in the young adult's room, while high school students may find the cushioned chairs and ottomans near the periodical room more appealing.

Need a snack break? Don't worry, the community room has a vending machine with candy and drinks, as well as a few tables where people can sit and chat.

How about a place for a meeting? The library has that covered, too. Two study rooms are available for working on projects, while a more serious presentation can make use of the meeting room, which seats 60, has a state-of-the-art audio-visual projector, and was designed so it can be accessed even when the library isn't open.

A new, large staff room has library employees happy as well. "What they had before was a glorified closet," said Whitley. "It's a big improvement."

On top of that, the library's historical room will be home to a host of old maps and archives on Cohasset.

The library even has a waiting room near the front door where people can make a free phone call to anywhere in Cohasset to secure a ride home. The phone may not be familiar to all who use it, however — it's a 1950s rotary-style pay phone. "We'll see how long it takes them to figure that one out," joked Whitley.

Towle said she couldn't be happier with the speed of the project. "Normally it takes 10 years for a library of this size to get off the ground, from the planning to the ribbon cutting," she said. "We cut that in half."

She said retired library director Janet Husband was "instrumental in the planning of the new library."

Husband's vacancy has just be filled by Jacqueline Rafferty, who served as director of the Hanson Public Library for the past six years.

At Sunday's open house, which lasts from 2 to 5 p.m., staff and trustees will meet with the public while volunteers from the Friends of the Library give tours of the new facility. A brief dedication ceremony will take place at 3 p.m.

stop work on their home — nearly 80 percent complete at that point — after it was determined building inspector Bob Egan erred in issuing them a building permit.

Neighbors had fought to stop construction on the property since August of 2002, but their requests were denied by Egan, who stuck to what he thought was a widely-held, longstanding interpretation of the zoning bylaws.

The neighbors then appealed the matter to the Zoning Board, which found the bylaws had been wrongly interpreted. The Ayers' lot was non-conforming, the board said, so they should have applied for a special permit, unless they had planned to stick within the exterior dimensions of the pre-existing building.

If the Zoning Board sides with the Planning Board in its upcoming ruling, the Ayers will have to hope for victory in Superior Court to complete their home according to plans. The "cease and desist" order previously mandated by the Zoning Board would become enforceable if the application for a special permit is denied. But Sawyer has said she would seek an injunction against the order if necessary.

Debate at Wednesday's Planning Board meeting started off on a tense note. When board member Al Moore began by saying there was a tendency to feel sympathy for the Ayers because their home was almost completed, neighbor Jack McCarthy of 278 Jerusalem Road interrupted, "Do you have sympathy for the neighbors too, or?"

But after a lengthy reference to the musical "Fiddler on the Roof," Moore revealed he did agree with the neighbors. "It's clearly more detrimental to the neighborhood and it's unfortunate," he said.

Neighbor Steve Jacob of 15 Jerusalem Lane proceeded to argue why the home was so detrimental. Jacob said he had statements from state-certified appraisers to prove that his property, which abuts 3 Jerusalem Lane, had been significantly devalued by the Ayers' new home. He showed photographs of views of the water from his home and another that had been almost completely eliminated. "Now I'd say that's substantially more detrimental. Wouldn't you?," he said to the board.

Jacob also questioned Mr. Ayer's intent to keep the house, claiming he was planning on selling it for profit all along. Jacob's wife, Patty Davis, echoed that sentiment. "The first thing Mr. Ayer said to me when we moved here was, 'Every house on this block is a teardown,'" she said. "If that's his view of the neighborhood, then what's his view of the rest of Cohasset?"

Reached by phone, Mr. Ayer disputed Mrs. Jacob's statement. "That's not true," he said, adding that a few of the neighbors had done "a gorgeous job" in recent renovations to their homes.

Ayer also said he was confident that "justice would prevail." "I think the more outside scrutiny that comes in on this matter, the more people will see that we're being singled out for discrimination," he said.

These two photos from neighbors at 9 Jerusalem Lane show their view prior to the new house at 3 Jerusalem Lane and with the house near completion.

But Planning Board member Bob Sturdy, after defending the neighbors in their extensive efforts to halt construction, said that neither Egan nor the town was to blame for the situation. "The old saw of the law is 'Ignorance of the law is no excuse,'" he said. "It's beholden upon the owner to know the law and hire legal counsel if he has any questions about it."

However, the Ayers did have legal counsel in Sawyer, as did Egan in Town Counsel. Sawyer said the four parties met before Egan denied neighbors' requests to stop work on 3 Jerusalem Lane. She said everyone agreed that Egan's interpretation of the bylaws was correct.

Sawyer also said Zoning Board chairman Woody Chittick was originally in agreement with Egan, pointing to statements Chittick made in an early ZBA hearing on the matter—testimony she has included in a complaint now filed in Superior Court.

According to Sawyer, this is not a case of the Ayers being ignorant, but a case of the town reversing its interpretation of the bylaws.

"It's not ignorance of the law," she said in an interview. "How is (Mr. Ayer) ignorant of a law that was not in place when he applied for something? How can you be ignorant of something that does not exist?"

Sawyer questioned the role of Town Counsel in the dispute. "How Town Counsel can advise Mr. Egan to do one thing, and then when the Zoning Board of Appeals reverses their longstanding interpretation of the zoning bylaw, how Town Counsel can then jump on that ship—it doesn't make a lot of sense to me," she said.

Sawyer also criticized the Planning Board for weighing in on the issue of a special permit when one of its members, Chris Ford, is indirectly involved in the matter.

Ford and fellow Planning Board member William Good were absent from the recent meeting, but the remaining board members voted 3-0 to recommend that the Zoning Board deny the Ayers' request for a special permit.

Ford's home and at least 13 others in town involve circumstances similar to 3 Jerusalem Lane, having undergone extensions or alterations on non-conforming lots without special permits. Sawyer has demanded the homes be forced to acquire special permits.

Egan ruled two weeks ago that the homes would not be immediately subject to the Zoning Board's decision regarding 3 Jerusalem Lane. Sawyer is appealing the decision, saying her client has been singled out for prejudicial treatment.

Were Ford and the 13 other homeowners eventually made to apply for special permits, it is unclear whether they would faee opposition from neighbors claiming their extensions or alterations were detrimental to the neighborhood.

Meanwhile, the Planning Board has drafted a new warrant article with the hope of avoiding future situations like the one at 3 Jerusalem Lane. The article would amend the bylaws so that plans for new homes would be reviewed by the Planning Board, the Board of Health, the Conservation Commission and the Zoning Board of Appeals before a building permit is issued.

TALK WORTH CHECKING OUT

Dr. Alan Jacobson, of South Shore Mental Health, will be speaking at the South Shore Art Center on Friday, Feb 28 from noon to 1p.m. He will be discussing "Adolescent Risky Behavior" and strategies for parents to prevent it. There will be a Q&A to follow.FREE Any questions call the Cohasset Social Service League 781-383-0771.

AN IMPORTANT SAFEGUARD

The Cohasset Project SAFEGUARD Committee, whose mission includes promoting physical, social, and emotional/mental health programs for K-12 students, invites you to a special program for eighth grade students and their parents on March 12, 2003. The Project SAFEGUARD concept is one that emphasizes parent and community involvement in youth risk reduction and prevention programs.

Students and parents will view and discuss the play Jesse's Journal, an innovative health program for middle school students developed by The Women's Crisis Center of Newburyport. This presentation uses drama as an educational tool to address a variety of middle school issues including family and peer relationships, appearance and behavior, dating, gender issues, substance use and abuse, and social and academic stress. Cohasset High School students will act out the play. In addition, there will be opportunities for small group discussions and interaction among the students and adults.

Parents of eighth grade students, as well as other interested community members are invited and encouraged to attend. The program will begin at 8:55 A.M. with refreshments in the high school cafeteria. The play begins promptly at 9:15 in the auditorium. The program will end at 11:15 A.M. and students will be dismissed from school (this is an early release day for students). Parents will be invited to remain at the school until 12:00 for further discussion among themselves.

For more information, please contact Health Education Coordinator, Dr. Michael Gill (383-4205) mikegill@chs.ssec.org. Parents, please let us know by March 1, 2003 if you plan to attend.

PARTY PLANNING

The Post Prom Party Committee is holding a meeting for the entire Senior Class parent body on Thurs.,

February 27, 2003 at 7:30 PM in the CHS cafeteria. The group encourages all the senior parents to attend, especially the dads (for construction, in particular), to sign on for different responsibilities. Participants who work together on this magical project will most likely experience lots of fun and a special bonding with other Senior parents. This is also a good time to begin gathering baby pictures as well as current photos. Any questions, call 781-383-2702.

FUNDRAISER

The fundraising drive is underway for POSTPROM PARTY 2003. Note cards (5x7) with the school's logo and colors (blue and white) are available with matching envelopes in packages of 10 for $10. To place an order, send your name, telephone number and check (payable to COHASSET POSTPROM 2003) to: Cohasset Postprom 2003 16 Fernway Cohasset, MA 02025.

A WORLD OF DISCOVERY

Our World, Children's Global Discovery Museum celebrated its groundbreaking in November 2002 and renovations are underway to the museum's space which will be located adjacent to the new Paul Pratt Memorial Library on Sohier Street in Cohasset. Our World has raised one-third of the funds needed to meet its goal for the opening of the museum and are portions of the museum are expected to open in the fall of 2003. The focus now is on fundraising for the playground which will be built adjacent to Our World.

The play structure previously donated to the town of Cohasset (known to many families as the Pirate Park) was outdated and eventually removed for safety reasons. The goal is to renovate the existing area and provide a new playground that Cohasset residents, along with visitors to Our World and the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, will enjoy for years to come. The estimated cost to rebuild the playground is $125,000.

BRICK BY BRICK

One of the ways the Our World Playground Committee will be raising funds for the playground is with the Brick by Brick program. Through the Brick by Brick program, your donation of $100 will be recognized with an engraved brick. You can have your name, your family's name, loved one or your business name celebrated in brick. If you prefer, you also have the opportunity to contribute a larger engraved paver or a beautiful hardwood bench complete with an engraved brass plate. Engraved bricks and pavers will be used in walkways and as accents throughout the surrounding areas of the playground. Construction on the walkways is slated to begin in the spring of 2003. All the funds generated by the Brick by Brick program will go directly to the designing and purchasing of play structures, landscaping of the play area and on-going maintenance.

To participate in the Brick by Brick program, please call Debbie Kuppens at (781) 383-6399. If you have any questions about the playground project or would like to make a larger contribution, please call Our World at (781) 383-3198. Please note that your donation is tax deductible. The first 100 brick orders received will be entered into a drawing for a $100 gift certificate for dinner at Atlantica Restaurant

AMAZING CREWS

I hope that everyone is dealing OK with all the cold weather and snow! I want to thank all of the DPW crew and everyone who came in to work last week on doing a fantastic job with the roads, sidewalks and schools, etc… I have to say that it never ceases to amaze me, the number of people who complain during a snow event given the magnitude of the job at hand. Yes, my husband is a member of the DPW crew but this message is not being written for him, it is being written for all of the crew who worked night and day last week to get the job done and had numerous complaints from residents who were upset that their driveways were plowed in! The reality of a snowstorm is that roads need to be cleared and it is just not possible to go around each and every driveway to avoid blocking it.

I cannot believe that I would actually feel the need say this but..... Yelling, complaining and causing problems will not clear your driveway for you, especially when they are made to the people who work so many hours straight trying to keep the roads clear for traffic. Sorry, I just had to vent.

That is all for this week. Please send me your news and information no later than Mondays by noon.

OPINION

Avoidable tragedies

With the nation hunkered down under a terrorist alert, we have been reminded this past week in Rhode Island and the previous week in Chicago, of dangers that have nothing to do with terrorism.

The record-breaking snowstorm that hit last week had a comforting familiarity to it. But there was nothing comforting about the horrifying stampede at a Chicago nightclub that left 21 dead that same day. That nightmare has now been eclipsed by a similar tragedy closer to home. As authorities pick through the rubble of a West Warwick, R.I., nightclub and doctors work to save the injured survivors of last Thursday night's fire, everyone's asking what went wrong. Ninety-seven are known dead.

There are many answers, none of them satisfying, and questions are likely to linger for days to come. Why were there no sprinklers? Why was the band allowed to fire up its pyrotechnic display in such a small, cramped place? Why couldn't panicked patrons find the emergency doors?

Tragedies always breed comparisons, and here in New England this fire sparks memories of the infamous 1942 blaze that killed 491 people at Boston's Cocoanut Grove. Both of the nightclub disasters bear similarities to the Cocoanut Grove. The Cocoanut Grove was decorated with palm trees made of paper that turned into torches. The wall behind the stage in the Rhode Island club ignited just as quickly and the fire spread across the ceiling, just as it did at the Cocoanut Grove. Like the Chicago club, the Cocoanut Grove lounge where the fire started was on the second floor. Emergency exits were locked and patrons were trampled in a mad rush to squeeze out the front door.

"This is the Cocoanut Grove, the Kentucky supper club fire," Garry Briese, executive director of the International Association of Fire Chiefs, told the Associated Press, referring also to a nightclub fire that killed 164 people in Southgate, Ky., in 1977.

"The tragedy here," Briese said, "is that there's nothing new." The Cocoanut Grove inspired new fire codes that have saved countless lives, but each new tragedy reminds us that laws and regulations only work when they are enforced. The Chicago nightclub had been ordered closed months ago because of safety violations, but nobody bothered to see that the court order was being followed.

These two nightclub tragedies will, we hope, lead to better safety codes and more diligent enforcement wherever large crowds gather. They should also remind people that, whether the threat is terrorism or panic in a crowded club, individuals must take responsibility for their own safety. Know where the exits are and, for that matter, the fire extinguishers. Report anything that seems unsafe to those responsible.

Have fun, but stay alert and if something should happen, don't let panic cloud your judgment.

Al Qaeda is far from our only danger.

QUESTION OF THE WEEK

The selectman's race promises to perk up what would otherwise be a sleepy April 5 Town Election.

Political newcomer Gabriel Gomez, and last year's selectman challenger Roger Hill are seeking to unseat incumbent Selectman Michael Sullivan.

As in keeping with our tradition, we will pose a Question of the Week to local candidates in contested races.

All candidates opposed or unopposed, who have not already done so, are invited to submit photographs and formal statements announcing their candidacies.

Starting next week, we will feature candidates' answers to the Question of the Week. Responses should be brief — no more than 300 words — and must be received by 5 p.m., Monday. Candidates are asked to be specific and make every word count. Submissions will be cut if they exceed the word limit. (We use the word-count feature on the computer to determine the number of words.)

The following is the first Question of the Week:

Where do you stand on the need for a Prop. 2-1/2 override to help balance the fiscal year 2004 budget?

Candidates may reply by e-mail at mford@cnc.com; by fax at 781-741-2931, or by dropping off their responses at the Cohasset Mariner office in the Hingham Journal Building, 73 South St., Hingham Square. Items may also be dropped off at Cohasset News on Brook Street. However they choose to deliver their answers, candidates should adhere to the 5 p.m. Monday deadline.

We will also publish a weekly Candidates' Corner, which will be limited to a few paragraphs (about 150 words), from any candidate who chooses to submit dates of coffees, fund-raisers and the like.

The Mariner will not accept letters to the editor from candidates or letters endorsing or attacking particular candidates. The Mariner will publish letters about campaign issues from citizens not seeking election.

If you have questions, or would like to suggest a Question of the Week, call Mary Ford at 781-741-2933 or contact her by e-mail at mford@cnc.com.

Bradley leads call to halt the runway

After meeting with fellow members of the Legislative Caucus on Air Transportation, state Rep. Garrett J. Bradley, D-Hingham, and the Caucus called on various state and federal agencies to immediately halt all Logan expansion related endeavors, including current legal battles, in order that the Governor and FAA may examine new information relative to the economic benefits of Logan expansion. Based on previously unreleased reports it now appears that the economic value of the proposed Logan Airside Improvements Project, the primary facet of which is the construction of a new 5,000 runway, was exaggerated by a factor of 10.

Because of this material flaw in the way the original proposals were presented to state and local environmental officials, and because this economic data factored prominently in the original certifications that were issued, Bradley and many of his colleagues have called for an immediate moratorium and a reexamination of the project. Such reexamination, according to Bradley, should take place both in the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs and in the Governor's new Office of Commonwealth Development.

"This new information demands that the Governor halt this project and review it on its merit," Bradley said. "I have also asked the Attorney General to meet with us to discuss this critical new data"

The apparent exaggeration of economic benefits stems from a fundamental flaw in the proposal's drafting process. Expansion proponents (Massport and the New England Regional FAA) utilized a private consultant, Simat, Helliesen & Eichre (SH&E), in the preparation of their public arguments and ultimately their Environmental Impact Report/Statement (EIR/S) (This is the document proponents were required to submit to state and federal environmental regulators). SH&E created its own, and previously unused model, to predict delay costs and economic benefits of the project. After public comments on the EIR/S were submitted the FAA hired the MITRE Corporation, which is a frequent consultant to the FAA on a national level, to conduct their own review of SH&E's work and to conduct an analysis using the accepted cost/delay model endorsed by the federal Office of Management and Budget. The results of that MITRE analysis indicate that the economic benefits of Logan expansion were exaggerated by a factor of 10.

No emergency for expansion

LOGAN VIEW

MARY ANN FRYE

Massport is suing to lift a 3-decade-long injunction against runway expansion. It claims a right to relief from harm caused by no expansion.

Massport is trying to prove extreme hardship from NW wind delays and relief that can be gained only by runway expansion. Massport needs to document a pressing emergency that outweighs citizens' rights to environmental protection. Lawyers for Boston, Chelsea, Winthrop, Somerville and citizens' groups, all of which oppose the runway scheme because of pollution impacts, deftly took apart Massport's greatly inflated claims about delay reduction, using Massport's own data.

In the first round of closing arguments, Feb. 13, Judge Margot Botsford asked Massport's lead attorney why Logan dropped so dramatically in delay ranking relative to other airports, after 9/11. Opponents of runway expansion believe it is because prior to 9/11, at "peak hours," Logan was vastly overscheduled for its acreage and geographic location. Massport's attorney Roscoe Trimmier said the relative drop in delays is because the terrorist planes originated from Logan! In his argument, 9/11 is a temporary setback on the march to expansion. The argument was a time capsule from the peak of the 90's bubble - before Massachusetts faced severe cuts in services, local aid and jobs, before cities and towns sued Massport for negative impacts, before Acela proved a low impact alternative to incessant air shuttle traffic, and before security became the aviation priority.

Here we are on the South Shore. The proposed runway points right at us. All the new flight paths would scream over our heads and add toxic combustion pollution to our finite stock of airshed, which we breathe. What emergency wipes out our right to clean air and water, quiet enjoyment of our homes and the accumulated joint investment we have made in our region's economic value?

I appeal to South Shore people who thought they were willing to take on the impacts in exchange for a promise of reduced airport delays on the 10 days a year of strong NW winds. Are you willing to accept the South Shore impacts in exchange for nothing?

I appeal to Governor Mitt Romney, environmental, transportation, and housing chief Douglas Foy, and Secretary for Environmental Affairs Ellen Roy Herzfelder. Runway expansion does not outweigh the value to the regional economy of a healthful, high quality, South Shore residential zone. We are not willing to be robbed of our environmental rights as Americans, short of a horrendous, unavoidable, immediate emergency that voids the social contract.

I listened carefully to Massport's arguments in court. There is no emergency.

Mary Ann Frye, South Shore Jet Pollution Council, Southshorejetpollution.org

On his solitary dune: remembering Henry Beston

COMMON GROUND

AMY WHORF MCGUIGGAN

The world today is sick to its thin blood for lack of elemental things, for fire before the hands, for water welling from the earth, for air, for the dear earth itself underfoot.

—Henry Beston
The Outermost House

For those of us of a certain age, details of the Blizzard of '78 - 25 years ago this month will be forever seared into our memories. I still have my "I survived the Blizzard of '78" T-shirt, having survived the storm in an apartment in Boston. My thoughts were, however, on Cape Cod, particularly Provincetown where I spent the summers of my childhood and where I would spend one last summer, that summer of '78. How vulnerable, I wondered, would that sandy arm of Massachusetts, a seemingly fragile place that glaciers had shaped some 15,000 years earlier, be to the thundering, howling menace that was bearing down? If the storm could wreak the kind of havoc that television crews were showing us on the South Shore. I couldn't begin to imagine what its wrath would be doing to my beloved Long Point, the sandy tip of Provincetown 30 miles out to sea.

I should have known that Cape Cod a resilient, organic place that changes a little bit with every tide, every puff of wind would ultimately survive. She had seen such storms before and would, no doubt see them again. Though resculpted, the Long Point sand bar was still there when I arrived in town in late May. The breech in the beach behind the salt marsh and breakwater was the only obvious reminder of the fury that had visited back in February.

For those of us who love wildness and solitude, the storm had its silver lining. The breech prevented over-sand vehicles from driving out to the tip of Long Point where the sand meets sea, though anyone with a boat or the willingness to trek two miles over breakwater and sand could still enjoy the Point.

Within a few years the wound had healed itself, but by then National Seashore rangers had decided to make the ban on vehicular traffic permanent. Nature could begin to reclaim what was rightfully hers.

Up-Cape, another sand bar — the Nauset Spit — sculpted and remade over the years by storms, also felt the full fury of the storm. Wind and tide cut the dunes and washed over the marsh, turning it into a vortex of sand and water. Consumed in that vortex was the Fo'castle, a simple, two-room house, measuring, 16 by 20, that had been built on a dune in 1925 for writer Henry Beston.

Beston would spend more than two years in his house on the dune, staying at the Fo'castle for weeks at a time, his otherwise solitary existence interrupted occasionally by stays at Eastham's Overlook Inn, visits to the nearby Coast Guard station and forays to Orleans for supplies.

Facing "the four walls of the world" Beston chronicled the seasons, nature's beauty and mystery. He saw the majestic ocean afire with phosphorescence. He studied the anatomy of waves. With reverence, he watched the organization of bird flocks, the life of wild animals. With patience he waited for plants to send forth their colors, the sand to capture the sun's warmth. He saw, first hand, death and then renewal.

"The Outermost House: A Year of Life on the Great Beach of Cape Cod," published in 1928, became Beston's ode to wonder, to the powers of observation, to man's oneness with the natural world. He concluded his narrative by writing that "whatever attitude to human existence you fashion for yourself, know that it is valid only if it be the shadow of an attitude to Nature. A human life, so often likened to a spectacle upon a stage, is more justly a ritual. The ancient values of dignity, beauty, and poetry which sustain it are of Nature's inspiration; they are born of the mystery and beauty of the world. Do no dishonour to the earth lest you dishonour the spirit of man."

Born in Quincy

Born Henry Beston Sheahan on June 1, 1888 in Quincy, the man who would dub himself the "vagabond of the dunes" was the son of a surgeon, Dr. Joseph Sheahan, and Marie Louise (Maurice) Sheahan, a native of France. Beston's childhood was one filled with a love of sea and shore, with the wonders of the natural world, and a love for the theater to which he was introduced by his mother. After attending the Adams School in Quincy, Beston enrolled at Harvard, earning a bachelor's degree in 1909 and a masters two years later. By then, he had taken pen in hand and was writing. He returned to Harvard in 1915 as an English department assistant.

With war raging in Europe, Beston joined the French Army, serving with the Ambulance Corps and later as an official press representative with the U.S. Navy. His war experiences were recounted in two books, "A Volunteer Poilu" and "Full Speed Ahead," published under the name Henry Sheahan.

The savagery of war took an emotional toll on Beston who returned home in 1921 and began writing children's stories, fairy tales, under the name Henry Beston. It was his way of trying to expunge the horrors of war from memory.

Struck by the wanderlust and unfulfilled by his New York editing job, Beston was difficult to track down over the next few years, though one place he returned to time and again was Cape Cod. After publication of "The Outermost House," Beston married writer and poet Elizabeth Coatsworth, a native New Yorker whom he had met in 1921. The couple settled in Hingham, on Ship Street, in a home Coatsworth had bought in 1924 and named "Shipcote" (ship cottage). In her book, South Shore Town, Coatsworth described the house as a "gentle house in which to live or die."

From the top of Ship Street, she wrote, "the view northward is one of the prettiest I know on the South Shore. The bright waters of the harbor, and its islands, lie below one - seen between trees and four old houses holding the four corners of the intersecting Cottage Street. "

Coatsworth also fell in love with a diminutive "doll's house" cottage tucked away on Green Street Court in a district then known as Kickaboo (behind what is today the Fruit Center). The Bestons rented the Littlest House, as it is still known, and it became Elizabeth's secret refuge, a place where she worked contentedly for two years, where she planted pansies, sat on the bench out back and watched the life around her, and occasionally had friends in for tea.

In time, Beston grew weary of the increasingly hectic pace of suburban living and the couple bought a farm, Chimney Farm, in Nobleboro, Maine. For some years, they and their two daughters divided their time between Hingham and Maine, but in the early 1940s they gave up their Hingham home and moved permanently to Chimney Farm. In 1948, while Coatsworth remembered the charms of Hingham in South Shore Town, Beston chronicled their life in Maine in Northern Farm., sounding again the theme of man's disconnectedness from nature.

Beston seldom returned to the Cape after settling in Maine. His Outermost House was moved twice — in 1933 and again in 1944 — to save it from the sea. In 1959 the Fo'castle and the surrounding dunes were donated to the Massachusetts Audubon Society for use by its members. Five years later, in 1964, Beston and Coatsworth traveled from Maine to attend a ceremony dedicating the Outermost House as a national literary landmark. In his remarks Beston, in failing health, urged his audience to "touch the earth, love the earth, honor the earth - her plains, her valleys, her hills and her seas." It was Beston's last visit to his beloved dune. He died in Maine in April of 1968.

Nan Turner Waldron

As interest in Beston and "The Outermost House" spread, people in need of nature's restorative powers began making the pilgrimage down the lonely barrier beach to Beston's dune. One of those pilgrims was Nan Turner Waldron whose father had been Beston's Harvard classmate.

Henry Beston's home, known as the Outer Most House located on a stretch of land in Orleans called Nauset Spit.

An avid birder and conservationist, Waldron stayed often in the Fo'castle over a 20-year period, spending more time than even Beston himself. She called the Fo'castle her "chrysalis," her spiritual cocoon, and wrote about her days and nights in the embrace of Beston's presence. In her book, "Journey to the Outermost House," she reflected on Beston's stay in the dunes and understood that his "year" had not been about his own personal survival but, rather, his exploration of the relationship between the human spirit and nature. Waldron wrote that Beston "showed others that there is a basic human need to belong once again to the earth that there are ways to open new doors for the human spirit."

Of the "thousands who come every year to the Cape God National Seashore," noted Waldron, "some hear of Beston and his house for the first time during a lecture or from a park ranger as they walk the marsh trail and return eager to learn more."

Don and Nita Wilding of North Attleborough had such an epiphany in 1996. Regular visitors to Cape Cod, one afternoon they found themselves browsing the bookshop at the National Seashore Visitor's Center in Provincetown. They bought Thoreau's "Cape Cod" and Beston's "The Outermost House" and settled in that evening with their reading, Don with Thoreau, Nita with Beston. Little did they know their lives were about to change.

Nita, an office manager who confesses that she has always wanted to live on a beach, remembers that she couldn't put down her book.

She said to Don, who was enjoying Thoreau's chronicle, "you are going to love this book."

She was right. Once he picked up the book, he couldn't put it down, hasn't put it down.

"Here I was," says Don, a sportswriter for the Foxboro Reporter, "living in an apartment 95 miles from Beston's beach. His book about connecting with nature just hits me. I couldn't stop thinking about how to get off this treadmill of modern life and apply Beston's attitude toward our own lives."

Eager to learn more about Beston, Don and Nita scoured libraries and the Internet but were disappointed by the dearth of information. They began their own quest and, little by little, put together the story of Henry Beston. They interviewed Cape Cod historians and writers, gathered photographs and artifacts, met with friends and family including two of Beston's nieces, poured over Beston's own writings, walked Beston's beach. The more they searched, the more they found, the more they learned, the more there was to learn. They met Nan Turner Waldron who became a cherished friend and who, through her own experiences in the Fo'castle brought Beston's adventure to life.

Outermost Web site

In September of 1999, the Wildings launched The Outermost Web Site dedicated to Henry Beston. As the site expanded so, too, did the circle of Beston devotees who were eager to share their thoughts about "The Outermost House." When Eastham celebrated its 350th anniversary in 2001, Don paid tribute to Beston with a 32-page magazine, "On its Solitary Dune," from which his new book, "Henry Beston's Cape Cod" evolved.

"Henry has taken over our lives," says Don with a chuckle.

Nita agrees and says that the couple is more enthusiastic, more determined than ever to bring Beston to a wider audience.

"The fact that one book could inspire us says a lot about the power of Henry's words," says Nita. "It seems to be a simple book, but it's very powerful, profound. I can't read it just anywhere, I have to quiet my mind as Henry quieted his mind. He got so much out of nature, recaptured his relationship with nature because he was quiet. It's his attitude that we appreciate, that we're trying to bring to our own lives. We believe that there is a place for Beston in the modern world."

The Wilding's latest effort to honor Henry Beston and share his philosophy is the Henry Beston Society, a non-profit organization still in its infant stages. Don and Nita would like, one day, to build a small museum for Henry Beston. Henry David Thoreau has one, so does Thornton Burgess, say Don and Nita. Henry Beston should have one, too. They'd like to build a replica of the Fo'castle so that people can see how Henry lived, see in a tangible way how he came to understand the "mystery of being" by living simply, Zen-like, always with awareness.

Had Beston lived to see the Blizzard of '78 bear down on his beloved beach, he would not have despaired that his tiny house, from where he saw the "stains of springtime greenness," heard the sibilant notes of duck wings, and tasted the "fine sea tang in the air," had been taken by the sea, that his beach had been remade. Nan Waldron, who did live to see the storm's aftermath, called the loss of the Fo'castle an "acceptable sorrow."

When asked what understanding of nature one shapes from so strange a year, Beston wrote that "creation is still going on, that the creative forces are as great and as active today as they have ever been, and that tomorrow's morning will be as heroic as any of the world. Creation is here and now. So near is man to the creative pageant, so much a part is he of the endless and incredible experiment, that any glimpse he may have will be but the revelation of a moment, a solitary note heard in a symphony thundering through debatable existences of time."

School chief addresses projects

TO THE EDITOR:

The following was sent to parents and staff of the Cohasset Public Schools.

I am writing to provide an update on the renovation projects. As we draw nearer to the completion dates of the Deer Hill and Middle/High School projects, I am aware of the need to confirm the School Committee plans for the actual date of the grade moves, based upon my recommendations. Please know that I welcome any of your questions or suggestions in writing to my office, or you may speak to your School Council or PSO representative for forwarding to me.

Let me begin with a brief summary of the renovation at Deer Hill and the Middle/High School. The Deer Hill project was completed in December with some finish work still ongoing. I am pleased to report that the project was both on schedule and on budget. The Middle/High School project, vastly greater in scope, also appears to be on schedule and on budget for delivery in December of 2003. The completion dates for these buildings directly affect our grade reconfiguration plans in so far as the Cohasset Public Schools utilizing the new space to full capacity, and in the most positive manner for academic and financial reasons.

The community is aware of the Task Force, which I convened comprised of administration, faculty and parents, who made recommendations to me based upon material that they collected from all facets of the school system as well as from systems comparable to ours in Norwell and surrounding areas. Because the reconfiguration is a designated plan and the renovations reflect that plan, let me clarify the remaining steps prior to the actual move date.

I have received the Task Force recommendations and have taken them into consideration. I soon will take my plan before the School Committee, at which point they may vote on a move date. The School Committee will take into account various recommendations compiled from the Task Force and my office. Recommendations such as expanded School Administrations, academic continuity and sequencing, transportation, social and athletic programs, special education services, as well as faculty and parental concerns. Clearly, the considerations are many and the budget issues are complex. I am certain that you appreciate the immensity of this move and the seriousness with which we take the issues.

Again, we welcome all parent and staff participation in this move decision. Please feel free to contact your School Committee members to express your concerns and opinion regarding the date of the move.

To reiterate, the move may take place either in January, February or April 04 (this would affect the current 5th grade and the current 2nd grade as the first to move), or at the latest, September 04 (this would affect the current 4th and 1st grade classes). Of course plans would have to be expedited if the projects were completed earlier than anticipated. A final decision on the move date will be made soon after the School Committee reviews the task force report.

The Task Force will reconvene over the ensuing months to help facilitate the complexities around the move once a decision on the move date has been made. I look forward to the utilization of these new facilities and appreciate the continuing support of the community.

Budget priorities

TO THE EDITOR:

The following is a copy of a letter sent to the Board of Selectmen dated Feb.17.

We read in the Mariner that the Town is facing a "worst case scenario" with probable cuts of 20 percent in state aid. It is reported that Town officials are struggling with a "balancing act" of unwelcome alternatives such as layoffs, elimination of school positions, cutting school supplies, imposing fees for school bus rides, forfeiting raises for employees, and other economies.

When Cohasset voters wisely voted "No" to an override to help finance taking down the utility poles and burying the overhead wires in the Village, Dean Rizzo of the Cohasset Revitalization Corporation lamented, "You no longer have the option to do decorative lighting spaced evenly throughout the sidewalk".

Is this the time to spend money on "decorative lighting"? Or on city- style sidewalks with 6-inch granite curbs? Why aren't asphalt sidewalks and low asphalt curbs better? As we have written before, high granite curbs are a hazard to bike riders and an unnecessary impediment to mothers and others pushing strollers.

Many people think Cohasset is a charming town, as is. Many of us who live here are mindful that major movie companies chose Cohasset as the perfect setting for two quite different films because of our great natural beauty and pleasant patina of age.

In better times, the state and MBTA made grants of $2.7 million for CRC initiated "improvements". We wish there were some way, now, to divert the state portion of those public funds to our more basic needs.

Grinding slowly

TO THE EDITOR:

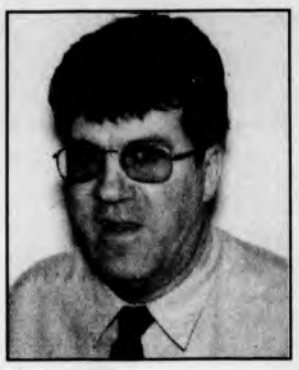
In response to Patrick G. Water's letter last week citing his disappointment in the School Committee for its lack of receptivity to alternative ideas, I would like to cite another old adage, "The wheels of government grind slowly." Although not very popular in the age of the sound bite, I reference this to say that perhaps what he perceived as a polite dismissal of suggestions from citizens or an unwillingness to debate was really our need as budget makers to take every suggestion, novel idea or alternative solution extremely seriously. We do this knowing each one must be carefully considered for its full impact on the entire district and the many different types of students it serves. We must also move forward knowing it will not be the school committee's job to implement the new programs or adjust to cuts proposed but rather that of the administration, staff and students. We therefore must always allow the additional and necessary time for our administration to examine each change proposed, alternative or otherwise. Our budgeting process and the input that goes into it is much larger and longer than one meeting of the school committee where we invite input from the audience. During budget season, which this year began in the second week of December, each principal presents their school budget to the committee. Our administrative team will meet weekly as well to discuss the impact of any new ideas or changes being discussed by the School Committee. They then funnel that information back to us through the superintendent. In addition, Dr. Malvey meets monthly with his LINKS group comprised of 15 citizens who serve as a conduit to the school community. They are asked to provide budget input as are each of the three school councils.

This does take time and thus our wheels do grind slowly. Given the magnitude of the budget cuts being discussed and the amount of change that they imply, we feel more than ever that we should move ahead slowly and carefully. We say this not as some type of defense but as a clarification to let folks know that we do appreciate and encourage their input, ideas and suggestions. We ask anyone with thoughts or ideas on the further developing budget to come to a meeting of the school committee, superintendent links group or school council. If those are not convenient, please feel free to contact any member of the school committee or the superintendent himself. By taking our time we feel more input, rather than less will go into this extremely important, community-based and, yes, somewhat slow process.

Pat Martin, Secretary
On behalf of the School Committee

CANDIDATES CORNER

Hill runs for selectman



Roger Hill

My family has had ties with Cohasset for 50 years. I was born and raised in this small town and I have achieved all my childhood milestones in Cohasset. I got married, purchased a home and started a family here. I live and carry out my business in Cohasset and I will most likely be buried in Cohasset.

My business is located here also. I invested in the local business community by purchasing commercial property on Route 3A. I meet you on the street, in local stores, at school functions and athletic events. I don't reside in Cohasset, I live in Cohasset.

I ran for Selectman last year because I felt if Cohasset was to be successful in the coming years, we needed to change the way things get done. I have attended all but three of the Selectmen's meetings in the past year and a half. I know what's going on in town. Not much has changed. In fact, the financial picture is worse and the challenges more difficult. There is a need for trust and better leadership than we have seen in the past year, so I'm running again.

Fundamental concerns over costs that coincide with the challenges of growth and development of the community are minimized among conflict. We need a representative that will bring resolve back to the people. My motivation to provide leadership comes from a desire to protect integrity of what I know and love. I have the sensibility of a businessman and the insight of a native.

As someone who has grown up in Cohasset, I am invested personally with the crises that are looming over our residents. Education shall remain a paramount priority for our children. Alternative solutions for equitable and affordable housing for those citizens who have a fixed income need to be asserted and directed into a realistic plan in the face of the state's housing crisis.

The cutback in state funding has made balancing the budget even more pressing. We literally cannot afford to continue in the same track. There needs to be more accountability and better prioritizing in the budget. Balancing the budget is going to take creative thinking and courage; willingness for all town agencies to work together towards the common good; and an unprecedented cooperation between town government and the community. It won't be easy, but together we can do it.

The town's natural beauty is a matter near and dear to my heart. My father purchased and donated the Great Brewster Woods to the town. The harbor area, Wheelwright Park, Whitney & Thayer Woods, Little Harbor, Sandy Beach, are conservation and recreation areas we all enjoy. Our marshlands and wetlands provide us scenic beauty and a bountiful water resource. We need to protect them. The challenge is to balance the interests of preserving Cohasset's scenic character, it's environmental health, it's unique open space, and the interests of development. Again, not easy, but together we can do it.

My ties to the town, and to you, are strong. I have known most of you for many years. I have been active in the community for those same years – Yacht Club, House Committee member, Senior Shuttle driver, South Shore Art Center volunteer and gallery artist. I have also been vocal in the effort put forth in the downtown area.

I am not new to town or its concerns, but I do bring a new outlook and an initiative to bring about a positive change. I have a first hand understanding of the issues, a longtime commitment to Cohasset, and a proven passion for the job at hand.

I believe I can provide the leadership we need. I hope you will agree. I would appreciate your input regarding my platform. Please contact me by email: the19ahills@attbi.com.

WEEK IN COHASSET

Effects of Greenbush delay still unknown

Town officials are still unsure how a six-month delay on the Greenbush railroad project will effect other projects that are part of a mitigation agreement between the town and the MBTA.

In the mitigation, the MBTA agreed to provide $500,000 for improvements to the Town Parking Lot, $250,000 for reconstruction of the Sohier Street wells, and more than $1 million for completion of the James Brook Drainage Improvement project.

Town Manager Mark Haddad met last week with several MBTA officials to discuss how the projects would be effected but received no definite answers.

"They have assured me that the Greenbush Line restoration is still a viable project and they believe that after all these issues are worked out, construction activities will resume," Haddad wrote in his weekly report to the Board of Selectmen.

Haddad asked the officials whether the town should still move forward with James Brook Drainage Improvement project. He also said the town would be willing to oversee the reconstruction of the Town Parking Lot if the MBTA could provide the funds.

MBTA officials are meeting today to discuss the matter and will report back to Haddad.

was dear to him. "She was his life. He would do anything for her," she said. "He was a great father."

Howorth was also fond of his two Black Labrador dogs, Maggie and Cody.

Growing up in Cohasset, Howorth was an accomplished athlete. He was a member of the varsity hockey team and the varsity football team at the high school. He also enjoyed fishing on his father's boat out of Cohasset Harbor. "He was out there everyday in the summer," recalled his father. "He fished everywhere — from Marblehead all the way down to Plymouth."

Howorth attended Bryant College in Smithfield, R.I. after graduating from Cohasset High School. He later transferred to Plymouth State College in Plymouth, N.H., where he majored in marketing.

For his outstanding academics, Howorth was nominated to the "Who's Who" in American Colleges and Universities in 1986 and 1987. He was the president of the American Marketing Association during his senior year and he was a leader in a nearby hospital drive for four years. He graduated from Plymouth State in 1987 with a bachelor's degree in business administration.

Howorth worked for his father's company as a sales representative for a short time and then got involved in computers. "He taught himself everything he knew with computers" said Dooley. "He loved helping people out."

Howorth eventually went on to work for two different technology companies before landing his job in Woburn.

Aside from his daughter, father, sister, and companion, Howorth is survived by his mother, Eileen M (Sorterup) Howorth Jr. of Cohasset; a sister Susan Howorth Pritchard of Darien, Conn.; a niece and a nephew.

QUESTIONS

BHRC is sponsored and underwritten by Fleet Bank as a public service for readers of the Cohasset Mariner. It is written by Bob Katzen who has covered the legislature for over 25 years and has been providing this feature to newspapers since 1975.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local representatives' votes on three roll calls from recent sessions. There were no roll calls in the House or Senate last week. All roll calls are on the bill that was signed into law giving Gov. Romney the power to make cuts to local aid and higher education funding in order to balance the fiscal 2003 state budget.

CUT THE SAME PERCENTAGE FOR ALL COMMUNITIES (H 2010)

House 131-20 approved, an amendment requiring any local aid cuts in a specific local aid category to reduce local aid by the same percentage for every city and town. The final version of the bill signed into law by Gov. Romney did not include this provision. Amendment supporters said this would ensure that all communities are treated equally and would prevent the governor from making unfair decisions that would cut different percentages of local aid from various communities. Amendment opponents said the restriction goes too far and would tie the governor's hands. They noted it could result in some communities' aid being reduced so much that they would be spending less than the minimum foundation level required under the Education Reform Act. (A "Yea" vote is for requiring equal cuts. A "Nay" vote is against requiring equal cuts).

$200 MILLION EMERGENCY RESERVE FUND (H 2010)

House 127-26, rejected an amendment creating a $200 million loan fund from which cities and towns can borrow interest-free money to mitigate the impact of any local aid cuts made by Gov. Romney. The $200 million would be funded from available resources or by a state bond issue and communities would pay the funds back over a five-year period. Amendment supporters said this fund would help cities and towns make up for the drastic local aid cuts and help prevent cuts in essential services, education and public safety personnel. They noted many communities do not have any reserve or stabilization money to make up for the cuts. Amendment opponents said there are no "available funds" to fund this loan reserve and argued that it is fiscally irresponsible for the state to borrow money and then loan it interest-free to communities. They said this type of avoidance just postpones the day of reckoning. (A "Yea" vote is for creating the $200 million emergency reserve fund. A "Nay" vote is against creating the fund).

LIMIT LOCAL AID CUTS TO ONE-THIRD OF ALL CUTS (H 2010)

House 139-12, approved an amendment prohibiting the local aid cuts made by the governor from totaling more than one-third of the total cuts he makes. Amendment supporters said this would ensure that local aid is not cut excessively and that cuts are made in other areas as well. Some amendment opponents said the governor has already promised to limit local aid cuts to no more than one-third of the total cuts. Others said the amendment is too restrictive and does not give the governor enough flexibility. (A "Yea" vote is for the amendment limiting local aid cuts to one-third of the total cuts. A "Nay" vote is against the limit).

ALSO UP ON BEACON HILL

MORE KENO - State Treasurer Tim Cahill announced a plan to hold Keno drawings every four minutes instead of every five minutes beginning March 1. Cahill says the plan will generate an estimated additional $35 million over the remainder of fiscal 2003 and fiscal 2004. Keno is currently played in 1700 locations and is the lottery's second most popular product.

ACTIVE MILITARY DUTY - Sen. Joan Menard (D-Somerset) has re-filed a bill providing that state employees who are granted a leave of absence for active military duty continue to receive their base state salary reduced by their military salary. It also ensures the employees do not lose any seniority or accrued vacation or leave time. The legislation was approved by the Senate last year but never made it through the House. Supporters say the bill will ensure that these brave citizens and their families do not suffer financially while defending the United States. They note that many private companies in Massachusetts already offer this protection.

COURT SYSTEM OVERHAUL - Gov. Mitt Romney proposed an overhaul of the state's court system. A key provision closes eight of the state's 60 district courthouses. Another provision folds the Boston Municipal Court system into the District Court system. Romney said that "one might think the Boston court is a haven for patronage" because the administrative costs for that one court with only 11 judges and one courthouse rivals the costs of the entire district court system with 170 judges and 60 courthouses. Supreme Judicial Court Chief Justice Margaret Marshall issued a statement praising the governor for addressing reform but warning that the magnitude of the proposed budget cuts is of great concern. The governor's plan was quickly criticized by some officials including those from some of the courts slated for closing.

GOV'S BUDGET ONLINE - Governor Romney's fiscal 2004 budget proposal is scheduled for release on February 26 and will be available online at mass.gov/eoaf.

Reflecting on A Day of Harmony Through Journaling

For Students, Parents, and Teachers

During the Day of Harmony broadcast, you heard many stories about how students experienced issues of difference and bigotry. Some of them talked about how they felt after being involved in or witnessing an incident of conflict, harassment, or bullying while others spoke about what they experience on a regular basis. They talked about how they often experience feelings of confusion, guilt, anger, etc. At times like these it is often useful to find ways to self-reflect. Writing in a journal is often a useful tool to help you sort out what happened from your point of view. It also serves as a way for you to observe your feelings and behavior over time. Journaling can give you ideas of how you or others could act in a more positive way in the future. You can also use what you have written in your journal to help focus your discussions with others.

Here are some questions that can help guide you as you write about an incident or to help you focus on issues that you would like to talk about with others regarding an incident your observed or were involved in:

- What was the date and time of the incident? — Knowing when something happened can help you sort out details especially when you're talking with others about it.
- Where did the incident take place? Was it at school (inside or out)? Was it at a favorite hangout? — Often the location of the incident has an impact on how an event unfolds.
- Who was directly involved in the incident? Who was around when it happened? What did they say or do? Do you know any of these people? — Often an incident involves more than the individuals who seem to be directly involved. The actions of bystanders can have a big influence over what is going on.
- Describe the incident from your perspective. How did it start? How did it get better or worse? What did each person do? What did the witnesses and bystanders do? What did you do? — Understanding your perspective and considering the perspectives of others can help you be open to other ways of understanding what happened. It can also help you to explain your perspective to others.
- Did anyone try to resolve the problem? How? If it ended, how did it end? What happened to the people involved?
- How do you think things could have ended differently? What do you wish someone could have said or done differently?
- Is the incident really over? Could it start up again tomorrow or some other time in the future?
- How did you feel during the incident? How do you feel now? — Often it is good for you to take time to sort out your feelings. Learning what things trigger certain feelings and what feelings trigger certain behaviors for you can help you get through difficult times. (See our anger management guide on the www.esrnational.org website.)
- What might you be able to do next time?

Suggestions for students:

Start to practice journaling by writing about your reactions to the Day of Harmony Program. You might want to either talk with your friends about what you wrote or you might want to wait a week or so and review what you wrote. It is often useful to compare how you feel about something after time has passed.

Suggestions for Teachers and Parents:

Write a sample journal entry and then share it with students and/or your child(ren). You could share it before they write their journal entries as a model to them or after so you can compare and contrast your experiences.

Teachers can ask students to pair up and read each other's entries. (You'll need to tell them ahead of time that this is the plan so they can leave out anything they don't want read in the version they share with you and others.) Then ask questions of each other in order to understand the other person's point of view. See our dialogue questions on our website (www.esrnational.org).

A group of veterans and local community members is seeking the names and addresses of Cohasset servicemen and servicewomen currently serving overseas in support of Operation Enduring Freedom to receive care packages from home.

Due to security restrictions, the defense department will not release the names of individual service members. In order to get these packages to Cohasset natives serving in Operation Enduring Freedom, family and friends are encouraged to contact the project coordinator, Coleman Nee, at 781-383-6958. All information will be kept strictly confidential and destroyed after the packages are sent.

"Being away from home is difficult and, many times, lonely for members of our armed forces," said Nee. "It is important that we remember our military officers and enlisted personnel that have been placed in harm's way in service to their country. These care packages will show them that their well-being and safety remain in our thoughts."

In addition, the group is also asking members of the community that wish to donate items or help coordinate the sending of the packages to also contact Nee for more information.

Brick by Brick program for new Our World playground

Our World, Children's Global Discovery Museum celebrated its groundbreaking in November 2002 and renovations are underway to the museum's space which will be located adjacent to the new Paul Pratt Memorial Library on Sohier Street in Cohasset. Our World has raised one-third of the funds needed to meet its goal for the opening of the museum and are portions of the museum are expected to open in the fall of 2003.

The focus now is on fundraising for the playground which will be built adjacent to Our World. The play structure previously donated to the town of Cohasset (known to many families as the Pirate Park) was outdated and eventually removed for safety reasons. The goal is to renovate the existing area and provide a new playground that Cohasset residents, along with visitors to Our World and the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, will enjoy for years to come.

The estimated cost to rebuild the playground is $125,000. One of the ways the Our World Playground Committee will be raising funds for the playground is with the "Brick by Brick" program.

Through the Brick by Brick program, your donation of $100 will be recognized with an engraved brick. You can have your name, your family's name, loved one or your business name celebrated in brick. If you prefer, you also have the opportunity to contribute a larger engraved paver or a beautiful hardwood bench complete with an engraved brass plate.

Engraved bricks and pavers will be used in walkways and as accents throughout the surrounding areas of the playground. Construction on the walkways is slated to begin in the spring of 2003. All the funds generated by the Brick by Brick program will go directly to the designing and purchasing of play structures, landscaping of the play area and on-going maintenance.

To participate in the Brick by Brick program, please call Debbie Kuppens at (781) 383-6399. If you have any questions about the playground project or would like to make a larger contribution, please call Our World at (781) 383-3198. Please note that your donation is tax deductible.

The first 100 brick orders received will be entered into a drawing for a $100 gift certificate for dinner at Atlantica Restaurant in Cohasset.

Quilt show sure cure for winter doldrums

Spring will be arriving a little early this year, along with the 10th Annual Quilt Show & Luncheon in Cohasset on Friday, Feb. 28 and Saturday, March 1. More than 55 beautiful quilts will be on display at the Second Congregational Church on Highland Avenue on Friday afternoon, from 1- 4 p.m. and Saturday from 10:30 a.m. to 2 p.m.

Originally conceived as an idea to help brighten up what can often be the dullest time of year, the Quilt Show has grown over the years. "The Saturday Show and Luncheon is almost always a sold-out event," notes Carol Sandblom, one of the event's original organizers. "That's why we've added the Friday showing this year."

The Saturday Show includes a sit-down luncheon where volunteers serve homemade strata, salad and a selection of desserts. "We decorate the tables with linens and beautiful flowers to help bring a hint of spring to the midst of winter," Sandblom added. "And tickets are just $10 for the luncheon and show on Saturday."

Those that can't make the Saturday luncheon should be sure to stop by the church Friday afternoon. Tickets for the Friday showing are just $5 at the door.

"We've displayed more than 550 different quilts here over the last 10 years," said Sandblom. "We've always had such a tremendous response from people willing to share their quilts, we've never shown the same quilt twice."

The quilts displayed come from all over the South Shore and beyond, and each quilt has its own story which is shared in the show's program. "Hydrangea Basket", a "3-D Quilt" by Dorris Carrol of Marshfield, will be on display. The quilt features beautiful fabric petals hand-sewn onto the quilt squares.

The Scituate Senior Center Quilters will also be proudly displaying "Flower Fantasy", the result of the group's weekly meetings.

This event has proved to be a successful fundraiser over the years, raising more than $15,000 for charity. All proceeds will again be shared between the Pediatric AIDS Charitable Trust and Boston Medical Center's Reach Out and Read Program.

Tickets for the Saturday Show and Luncheon should be bought in advance at the Second Congregational Church next to Cohasset's Town Hall on Highland Avenue. Stop by the church office from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Monday to Friday, or call (781) 383-0345 for more information.

IT'S HAPPENING

Brick by Brick program for new Our World playground

Our World, Children's Global Discovery Museum celebrated its groundbreaking in November 2002 and renovations are underway to the museum's space which will be located adjacent to the new Paul Pratt Memorial Library on Sohier Street in Cohasset. Our World has raised one-third of the funds needed to meet its goal for the opening of the museum and are portions of the museum are expected to open in the fall of 2003.

The focus now is on fundraising for the playground which will be built adjacent to Our World. The play structure previously donated to the town of Cohasset (known to many families as the Pirate Park) was outdated and eventually removed for safety reasons. The goal is to renovate the existing area and provide a new playground that Cohasset residents, along with visitors to Our World and the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, will enjoy for years to come.

The estimated cost to rebuild the playground is $125,000. One of the ways the Our World Playground Committee will be raising funds for the playground is with the "Brick by Brick" program.

Through the Brick by Brick program, your donation of $100 will be recognized with an engraved brick. You can have your name, your family's name, loved one or your business name celebrated in brick. If you prefer, you also have the opportunity to contribute a larger engraved paver or a beautiful hardwood bench complete with an engraved brass plate.

Engraved bricks and pavers will be used in walkways and as accents throughout the surrounding areas of the playground. Construction on the walkways is slated to begin in the spring of 2003. All the funds generated by the Brick by Brick program will go directly to the designing and purchasing of play structures, landscaping of the play area and on-going maintenance.

To participate in the Brick by Brick program, please call Debbie Kuppens at (781) 383-6399. If you have any questions about the playground project or would like to make a larger contribution, please call Our World at (781) 383-3198. Please note that your donation is tax deductible.

The first 100 brick orders received will be entered into a drawing for a $100 gift certificate for dinner at Atlantica Restaurant in Cohasset.

Quilt show sure cure for winter doldrums

Spring will be arriving a little early this year, along with the 10th Annual Quilt Show & Luncheon in Cohasset on Friday, Feb. 28 and Saturday, March 1. More than 55 beautiful quilts will be on display at the Second Congregational Church on Highland Avenue on Friday afternoon, from 1- 4 p.m. and Saturday from 10:30 a.m. to 2 p.m.

Originally conceived as an idea to help brighten up what can often be the dullest time of year, the Quilt Show has grown over the years. "The Saturday Show and Luncheon is almost always a sold-out event," notes Carol Sandblom, one of the event's original organizers. "That's why we've added the Friday showing this year."

The Saturday Show includes a sit-down luncheon where volunteers serve homemade strata, salad and a selection of desserts. "We decorate the tables with linens and beautiful flowers to help bring a hint of spring to the midst of winter," Sandblom added. "And tickets are just $10 for the luncheon and show on Saturday."

Those that can't make the Saturday luncheon should be sure to stop by the church Friday afternoon. Tickets for the Friday showing are just $5 at the door.

"We've displayed more than 550 different quilts here over the last 10 years," said Sandblom. "We've always had such a tremendous response from people willing to share their quilts, we've never shown the same quilt twice."

The quilts displayed come from all over the South Shore and beyond, and each quilt has its own story which is shared in the show's program. "Hydrangea Basket", a "3-D Quilt" by Dorris Carrol of Marshfield, will be on display. The quilt features beautiful fabric petals hand-sewn onto the quilt squares.

The Scituate Senior Center Quilters will also be proudly displaying "Flower Fantasy", the result of the group's weekly meetings.

This event has proved to be a successful fundraiser over the years, raising more than $15,000 for charity. All proceeds will again be shared between the Pediatric AIDS Charitable Trust and Boston Medical Center's Reach Out and Read Program.

Tickets for the Saturday Show and Luncheon should be bought in advance at the Second Congregational Church next to Cohasset's Town Hall on Highland Avenue. Stop by the church office from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Monday to Friday, or call (781) 383-0345 for more information.

Cohasset's Matt Baroudi flops on top of Triton wrestler in battle for third place at this weekend's Div. 3 state championships. Baroudi won the match, and will join three other CHS wrestlers at the All-State championships this weekend at Salem High School.

Ready to rumble

Four CHS wrestlers qualify for All-State championships

By David Ingber

And the season marches on.

Now in the final days of February, and a talented few Cohasset athletes still find their season continuing. Four Cohasset wrestlers will head to the All-State competition this weekend in Salem to compete against the top competition from every school division, with a fifth teammate to possibly join them.

Cohasset took second place at the Division III Sectionals the previous weekend at Foxboro High, finishing only behind the host Warriors. Nine different Skippers placed high enough at that tournament to qualify for the Div. III State competition, held this past Friday and Saturday at Burlington High School.

The tremendous showing at Sectionals proved invaluable for preferential seeding and placement at States.

Senior captain Terry Baroudi, his sophomore brother Matt, freshman Jon Littauer and junior captain Phil Strazzulla all took top four placings to advance to All-States. Sophomore Joe Kehoe finished sixth, and is an alternate for the upcoming competition.

What head coach Torin Sweeney was most impressed with at States was the team's ability to fight off a flu that had ravaged virtually the entire team.

Terry Baroudi (135 pounds), who was suffering from some of the worst symptoms, managed to make it to the semifinals. Although he lost to eventual champion Roman Walsh of Wilmington in the semis, he won two more matches to take third.

Littauer (103) felt effects of the cold so severely that Sweeney noted "the fact that he was able to stay in the tournament was a real accomplishment."

To Littauer's credit, the now veteran underclassman avenged

State Tourney Hockey Cohasset vs. Diman

Yeah, this is pretty much what John Blake had in mind

When the first year Cohasset High head hockey coach finalized his first schedule this past fall, he was only too happy to set the date with defending South Sectional champion Blue Hills for the regular season finale. The fact that his squad skated to a 2-2 tie with the perennial powerhouse squad made it all the better.

"It feels like we've already started the (state) tourney," said Blake, who actually spent the previous few years as an assistant coach at Blue Hills. "That game with Blue Hills had a playoff feel to it. It was extremely intense, good up and down hockey with both goaltenders standing on their heads."

As a result of that game played last Wednesday, Blake feels his team has a slight leg up going into Saturday's first round tourney match-up as "underdogs" against sixth seeded Diman Voke (11 a.m. start at Bourne's Gallo Arena). The Skippers finished with a 10-6-4 record and

Bixby vaults to new heights

Cohasset gymnastics star to represent Coh-Nor squad at States

By Joel Racicot
JRACICOT@CNC.COM

As the old Irish proverb goes, "Your feet will lead you to where your heart is." In the case of Cohasset High senior Meredith Bixby, her "feet" have vaulted her to a passion for gymnastics.

Bixby has become a pillar of consistency and excellence for a Cohasset/Norwell squad that she has starred on for four seasons. The four year Pilgrim Conference League All-Star will culminate her high school career this Friday night in Beverly at the state individuals meet.

At the state individuals meet, the top eight gymnasts in each the south, north and central divisions are chosen to compete in the all-around, and then the top eight in each of the four categories— vault, floor, beam and bars— are chosen to compete.

Bixby has qualified for the vault, floor and the bars, but missed competing for the all-around by two tenths of a point on her year's average. Representing the south section in the individuals, she is ranked eighth on bars with an 8.55 average, fifth on the floor with an 8.96, and fourth on the vault with an 8.7. Last season, Bixby took sixth place overall in the vault at the individuals meet.

"I'm looking to improve on last year's performance on the vault, and I also think I can do well on the floor," noted Bixby. "I have a lot more experience this year so I'm not really nervous."

Bixby stays in gymnastics shape and competes year round on a club team based at the Ellis School of gymnastics in Braintree. She does note,

Net loss for hoopsters

Season of frustration ends with graduation

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

As many well know, the difference between winning and losing a game can be slight. A missed bounce here, an unforced turnover there, or a lucky roll for the opponent all can quite easily turn a win into a loss.

Welcome to the story of the 2002-'03 Cohasset boys basketball team, whose 7-13 season, by all accounts, could almost as easily have been 13-7, which would have translated into extended play in the state tourney, which has gotten underway this week.

"It was really tough," noted senior captain point guard Jared Krupczak. "We had a real great shot but we just didn't get it done. We started playing team basketball too late."

The most obvious games that could have been potential season changers include some played in the South Shore League. Cohasset lost to Carver in overtime without the services of very important senior bigmen Ben Lynner and Ross Lieb-Lappen, who were both out due to sickness. Also painful was an early season loss on he road to Mashpee, a team the Skippers were clearly superior to, as evidenced in their 30-point thrashing of the Falcons the second time around.

Cohasset played Harwich very competitively their first time around, but could not close out the game on the road, ultimately falling by eight points.

As the regular season wound down with Harwich fighting for a higher seed in the postseason, Cohasset reversed its luck against the Rough Ryders, proving they had the skills to match competition with some of the best in Div. 4.

"We entered the season expecting to make the tournament," reported Lieb-Lappen, adding "A ref at the Mansfield tournament commented that our league must be really strong if we didn't make the tournament."

In truth, the South Shore League was rather impressive this year, the pace being set by an always potent Abington squad and Norwell, the team veteran coach Ron Ford has called "possibly the best team I have ever coached against."

But outside the SSL, the story was more of the same misfortune for the Skippers. Cape Cod Voc Tech slipped by the Blue on a buzzer-beater. Cohasset was beating Southeastern (18-1) the entire game before the Hawks made a run at the end to win it.

It would be easy to look at the Skippers strong finish as a positive, as they won four of their last five before the Mansfield tournament, and had a better than .500 record in the league for the latter half of the season.

However, their improved team play served primarily to frustrate, especially since Harwich, Cape Cod Voc Tech and Southeastern were all high seeds in the State Tournament.

Members of the team point to this year as the last one, at least for the foreseeable future, where the Skippers had a feasible chance to advance to the playoffs.

The caps and gowns this spring will claim five valuable seniors: tri-captains Krupczak, Lynner and Ian Kidder, as well as Lieb-Lappen and Scott Faber.

Next year's team will feature returning starters Chris Bilodeau and Sean Connolly, but the underclass turnout was extremely thin this year, with only one sophomore and a freshman team that recorded two wins.

though, that high school competition will be tough to replace.

"I'll miss competing for the high school squad," acknowledged Bixby. "I have so much fun on our team. High school is not as serious as club, so it's really a good time. Everyone is cheering each other on and the atmosphere is great."

Head coach Kara Connerty also realizes that losing Bixby will be tough to bear.

"It's going to be a huge loss for us when she graduates," noted Connerty. "She is a good kid, a great leader and our team has been very successful under her lead. It's going to be a big void for our team."

Eight seniors will also be chosen for the state national team Friday night, and Bixby is among those being looked at as a possible candidate. It will be very difficult to make the national team, especially this year, with the very competitive senior class that is vying for spots on the team.

Meredith is looking to continue her gymnastics career at Ithica College in New York, which has a Div. 3 gymnastics program.

"I really like the school academically, and I have talked to the coach, so it's looking like a nice fit," said Bixby.

Cohasset's Hill top 'dog'

Cohasset resident, Brian Hill has recently been named as an early selection to the 2003 S.S.B.C. "Seadogs" 13-and-Under Division AAU Travel Team Baseball Program as announced by the South Shore Baseball Club in Hingham. As a member of the "Seadogs", Brian will compete against other AAU (Amateur Athletic Union) organizations in Massachusetts for the right to appear in the AAU Baseball National Championships to be held in Kingston, NC this coming August. "Brian is an excellent athlete with explosive quickness and a strong arm. Should be a lot of fun!", says Frank Niles, 13-and-Under Team Manager.

Locally, Brian is a seventh grader at Cohasset Middle School and has played for Cohasset Little League and the All-Star Summer League since moving to Cohasset in 1998, at age nine.

Brian Hill

Growing in popularity, AAU Travel Team Baseball gives players, coaches and families the opportunity to travel and compete in a national tournament. "Competing in the National Championships is a thrill of a lifetime", says Frank Niles, President of the South Shore Baseball Club.

The South Shore Baseball Club will field eight teams in 2003 from the 10-and-Under to the 17-and-Under Divisions. Each member of the program is responsible for fund-raising approximately $2000 to participate. If you would like to sponsor Brian, please call the South Shore Baseball Club in Hingham at 781-740-4382.

Trendowicz' memory honored by TopGun lax Coach Award in his name

Paul Trendowicz was a regular in the Plymouth Sports Dome (and even in Hingham when we played there).

But even though he was an occasional player, we knew him primarily as a coach. He coached his brother Dan's Cohasset team. And he helped them win…a lot.

Paul didn't win by coaching in a Bobby Knight sort of way. Quite the contrary, he won by making his players want to play hard for him. They wanted to because they know how much he cared about them.

During a game, it was quite extraordinary to see how Paul always kept his focus on the boys. And he always kept it positive. He never rode the refs. He never complained about the other teams or their coaches. And he never, ever rose his voice to his players.

It's ironic that Paul, probably the youngest coach we've ever had in our league, was so much wiser than many of the "adult" coaches in our league.

And so, to remember Paul, and moreover, to set the standard for coaches to follow if they want to be part of our league, we will present this award at the end of our last season from now forward.

Dan Trendowicz named MVP in TopGun championship game

Cohasset 17 vs Scorpions 11
Start Line: 7 goals, 5 assists

Dan Trendowicz a secret unleashed on the unsuspecting Scorpions? No. He was the one player Coach Ray knew he had to shut down if he was t have any chance of winning the eighth grade indoor lacrosse league championship. But there is no shutting down Dan Trendowicz when the game is on the line. His 12 points (7 goals and 5 assists), gave him a role in 70 percent of his team's goals. And that's with a double team, or "face-guarding" defenseman hanging on him most of the way.

Say what you will about this team, but without Dan Trendowicz and Jared Kinch, we may just have had a horserace in this Middle School Silver Division.

With them, and you have a winning steak that may not be matched for many years to come.

drew the 11th seed.

"If we play the way we did against Blue Hills, I like our chances against just about anyone," said Blake, who took full advantage of his Blue Hills contacts to get a scouting report on Diman (13-6-1), a Mayflower League rival to the Warriors. Apparently, the Warriors did quite the dance on Diman in their two league meetings this season.

"I think developed a sense of confidence in that game and it looks like we're feeling more comfortable as a team than we were a few weeks ago. I've been pretty pleased with our play in the last three games."

Prior to Wednesday's tie, the Skippers sewed up their second consecutive South Shore League title with a hard fought 4-4 tie on the road against Harwich and then obliterated Carver's postseason dreams with a 9-1win.

A Mike Rasmussen tally off a nice feed from behind the net by Matt O'Connell tied last Wednesday's game for good with Blue Hills with eight minutes to play.

Much of coach Blake's optimism can be traced to the strong finish of junior Rasmussen, freshman O'Connell and their sophomore linemate, Ted Straughn.

"That second line has really been clicking lately, and taking some pressure off our top line," noted the rookie head coach. "To go into the tourney with two good scoring lines we can count on is a big plus for the whole team."

The top line comprised by senior captains John Durkin and Matt Davis along with freshman Mark Bouchard have hardly been slouches. For much of the season, this trio carried the team, but they have been somewhat snakebitten lately.

"The post seems to be a magnet for Durkin lately," noted Blake. "But he's a senior, and I wouldn't be at all surprised to see his best hockey come out in the tourney."

Despite his recent run of buzzards luck, Durkin still captured the South Shore League scoring title this season with 39 points (21 goals, 18 assists), with Davis (14-19—33) not far off that pace.

The latter star actually scored the Skippers first goal on Wednesday, and it came in typical Matt Davis fashion. The slick skating winger picked off a pass in front of Blue Hills blue line and walked in all alone on the Blue Hills net, faking the goalie out with a nifty bit of puckhandling and then tucking it around him. This tally came late in the first period just six seconds after the Warriors had potted their first.

"That was just a great solo effort from Matt," said Blake. "He can really do some exciting things in the open ice."

Make no mistake about it, though, the number one star of this game for Cohasset was freshman goalie Stephan Parnell. Of his 37 saves, Blake said "at least five or six were worthy of the highlight reel."

"Stephan has been a rock all year, and you have to remind yourself some time that he's just a freshman," said Blake "He took it to another level in this game, though. Obviously, that's another nice thing to see heading into the playoffs."

Parnell finished the season with an outstanding goals against average of 2.15 (41 goals, 19 games), and should garner serious all-star consideration in a veteran laden field that includes two seniors who are the returning league all-stars (Hull's Mark Saville and Abington's Kenny O'Sullivan).

Should Choosiest get by Divan, it will likely be Blue Hills (third seed, 13-3-2) awaiting them in round number two. The Warriors— who also edged Choosiest in an early season showdown, 3-2— have Abington (10-8-2, 14th seed) on Saturday.

"All in all, I think we're in real good shape heading into Saturday," concluded Blake. "This is why we played an extremely tough non-league schedule. We played Blue Hills tough twice, hung with Westwood (4-2 loss), beat Bourne and stayed right with Scituate one time. Those teams are all considered top (Div. 3) programs in the state. I think, looking at that, plus the way we finished, our players have a lot of confidence right now."

Hockey Notes

As mentioned, Durkin (21-18—39) and Davis (14-19—33) finished one-two in the team scoring race.

This dynamic duo was followed by Rasmussen (9-14—23), junior defenseman Mike Devine (10, 7—17), Straughn (7-9—16), O'Connell (6-10—16) and the third senior captain, Tom Anderson (4-10—14), who had 34 points last season, but sacrificed a lot of personal glory this season by agreeing to move from forward to defense.

Correction- A goal that was scored by freshman Ben Libby in the Carver game was mistakenly credited to another player in last week's report.

his loss in the quarterfinals to take fourth place in the consolation rounds.

Strazzulla (140) showed true grit at the tournament, outlasting three consecutive opponents on Saturday by one point decisions.

"He wrestled so well," mentioned Sweeney of his fourth placed captain. "I just can't say enough about him."

Matt Baroudi (215) took third in earning his first trip to All-States.

Sweeney noted that the flu had also taken a toll on Baroudi, as he did lose to the eventual champion Chris Platto of Burlington, but managed to hang on for an impressive finish.

Kehoe (125) went 3-3 for the tournament, closing strongly for this sixth place finish. Should the current four and five seeds be unable to attend in Salem this weekend, Kehoe would step in.

The top four wrestlers from every Division will compete at All-States, making it 12 athletes for every weight class. The top two wrestlers at All-States in each weight class earns the prestigious right to compete at the New Englands.

Reported the optimistic Sweeney: "I would like to think that all four of those guys could do it."

With five squad members placing, the Skippers, as a team, finished seventh in the Div. 3 field of 58 teams. The grappling Skippers also recorded 18 dual meet wins this year, the highest ever for a CHS wrestling team.

Seniors Dave Kupsc (112) and Cosimo Cambi (189) finished up their wrestling careers at the State Tournament. It was a nice way to go out, with both wrestling well, and Cambi, a relatively new team member in only his second year, recorded an impressive win.

Freshman Dave McKenna (119) won his first match at the tournament, ending up at 1-2 for his first State competition.

Cohasset Middle School TopGun Laxers win third championship of 2002/2003 season

On February 9th the Cohasset Boy's TopGun Lax Team won it's third and final championship of the 2002/2003 TopGun season. It was the final result of a third consecutive undefeated session and a 17 to 11 win over a team from Sandwich in the championship round.

Most of these young Cohasset athletes have been playing together for four years and they have created something very special during that time. Something that goes far beyond their string of forty-eight victories and one tie in fifty-one attempts. Something beyond their seven championships over the past two years and something beyond all of the stats that each of them have posted during their many challenges on the athletic fields. What they have created is a special bond amongst themselves and with their biggest fans; their families. At every game that they participated in, the stands would be filled with parents and siblings cheering on each and every one of them. The pride in their efforts that has been built and felt by not only the players but by those who supported them throughout the many seasons represents the best that athletics has to offer. Not because of the victories, but because of the dedication and the sense of TEAM that so clearly characterized this group of kids. Whenever one player needed assistance, it was there. If someone needed to step up to fill a void, it happened. Because there was no designated goalie, everyone played goalie rotating game to game and learning what it was like to be in that cage being shot at; often times with a game on the line. At the end of each game the stat sheet would show that 50% to 60% of the goals scored were assisted versus individual effort. Finally these boys are friends and they care about each other. They will play on different teams in the future as they go off to different schools and colleges, but they will always be Friends and TeamMates.

Helping teens explore Israeli-Palestinian conflict

"Seeking Shalom, Salaam, Peace" is a special five-week spring program designed for teens to explore the issues of the Israeli/Palestinian conflict.

This series is based on the documentary "Promises." "Promises" offers fresh insight into the Middle East conflict when filmmakers Justine Shapiro, B.Z. Goldberg and Carlos Bolado travel to this complex and charged city to see what seven children. Palestinian and Israeli - think about war, peace and just growing up. Living within 20 minutes of each other, these children are nevertheless locked in separate worlds. Through candid interviews, the film explores a legacy of distrust and bitterness, but signs of hope emerge when some of the children dare to cross the checkpoints to meet one another.

St. Stephen's Episcopal Church in Cohasset invites teens for a spring series on the Abrahamic religions and their impact on our lives today. Each meeting will involve some presented material and a lot of discussion - the most important part of this series is talking and listening to one another.

- Sessions 1-3: Promises Video 4 to 5:30 p.m. held March 9, 16, 23
- Session 4: Meeting the Yasin Family 4 to 5:30 p.m. held March 30.
- Session 5: Interfaith Seder at Temple Sha'aray Shalom in Hingham 3 to 5 p.m. held April 6.

There is no charge for this program. For more information, contact the Rev. Beth Wheatley Dyson at 781-383-1083.

Hope in uncertain times

The Glastonbury Series continues with "Listening to Other Voices: Hope in a Time of Uncertainty."

Please call the abbey to reserve a place, 781-749-2155. Free will offering.

In this presentation Paulson focuses on the leadership of men and women of hope and faith who can inspire others in times of cynicism and change, leading others in the pursuit of a hopeful future and in the task of reclaiming the power of purposeful service and lifelong learning.

One woman play for Lenten Season

"Head of the Cross. A Passion Play" is a one-woman play for the Lenten Season. Written and performed by Olivia Woodford, the play depicts women as they witness and recount the events leading up to Jesus' death and resurrection.

The play will be performed at St. Stephen's Episcopal Church at 16 Highland Ave., on March 9, at 6 p.m. Suggested donation is $5

Join the women as they witness and recount the events of Holy Week and Easter, as well as their own personal awakenings that happen in relationship to Jesus.

A young girl sneaks up the stairs to watch The Last Supper; Veronica watches Jesus carry the cross; Mary Magdalene watches Him die on the cross and later is at the tomb when He rises; Mother Mary cleanses and buries Him; and Martha wonders at the events of the Pentecost.

Woodford, who received a BFA in theatre from Boston University and was a professional actress in New York City is the founder of Healing Theater. She has taught theatre in public and private schools, and to people of all ages.

Lunch, laughter at the Glastonbury

Glastonbury Abbey invites the public to "Lunch and Laughter" at 1 p.m. on Tuesday, March 11 in its new Conference Center at 16 Hull St.

A buffet lunch will be served at 1 p.m. followed by an hour of stress-reducing laughter with Humor Talks & Workshop humorists, John and Ann Murphy. Come and experience a new perspective: when you can find humor in whatever bugs you, and can laugh at it, you can have a brighter, happier view of everything.

Spring has sprung

Scenes from last year's big Spring Flower Show at the South Shore Natural Science Center include a water garden display (above) by Kennedy's Country Gardens in Scituate.

Science center flower show's a welcome retreat from winter

By Kathleen Zigmont
CORRESPONDENT

There may be a blanket of soggy snow spread over the area, but the gardeners among us are already thinking about what lies beneath the snow cover, wondering which bulbs will pop through first this year, how to improve the garden and what's the latest in landscape design.

They can find some answers to those questions this weekend — Feb. 28-March 2 — when the South Shore Natural Science Center hosts its 6th annual Spring Flower Show featuring three days of workshops and events intended to teach, inspire and even relax attendees.

Gardening experts at the show will offer a variety of workshops on growing orchids, starting a well-designed garden, the best early spring flowers, and planning a water feature in the garden. A flower show highlight this year will be a visit from "the man with the red suspenders", Roger Swain — the former host of PBS' "The Victory Garden" and current science editor of Horticultural Magazine.

Swain, who is scheduled to talk at 1 p.m. Saturday on "Starting Your Springtime Garden," is making his first appearance at the science center and is expected to be a big draw for the avid and not-so-avid gardener alike, according to Joan Reid, public relations director at the science center.

"I think we're all ready for a little spring right about now.
South Shore Natural Science Center Public Relations Director Joan Reid

"We have a large following of people involved in garden clubs throughout the area. We have gardening programs all year long and they are very well-received. I think this year's Flower Show and the appearance of Roger Swain will be a nice attraction," she said.

And this year's show is the most jam-packed ever with events and workshops, according to Reid.

America coming to America's hometown

70s rock legend headline at Plymouth's Memorial Hall

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

America band members Gerry Beckley and Dewey Bunnell make a tour stop at Plymouth's Memorial Hall Friday night. In addition to the 70s hits that made them famous, the duo says concert-goers can expect some new music and a few surprises.

In the 1970s, America rose to Top 40 fame with two main distinctions. One of them was as a leading proponent of the mellow, laid-back soft-rock movement of the decade. The other was as the second most successful act to ever work with legendary studio producer George Martin, next to only a certain quartet of mop-topped lads from Liverpool.

America was then the original trio of Gerry Beckley (vocals, guitar, keyboards), Dewey Bunnell (vocals, guitar) and Dan Peek (vocals, guitar, bass), who in the mid 70s harmonized their way to multi-album gold and platinum success and a string of Top Ten hits, including "A Horse With No Name," "I Need You," "Ventura Highway," "Tin Man" and "Sister Golden Hair" among others. Since 1977, the band has carried on as the duo of Beckley and Bunnell and continued to release albums and tour regularly, following up with more Top 40 hits including 1982's Top Ten "You Can Do Magic."

The remaining America twosome is currently on tour once again, and will make a stop in Plymouth as the newly renovated Memorial Hall continues its 2003 Celebrity Series concerts this Friday, Feb. 28 at 7:30 p.m.

"We're still playing about 120 to 150 shows a year, at clubs, theatres, county fairs and casinos among other venues," said Bunnell just before America left on a recent Central American leg of its current tour. "It's difficult at this stage of our career as a band to the find the commitment from a major label, with the right kind of distribution and promotion plan, and the time to go into the studio to make an album that we'd call commercially viable."

"But Gerry (Beckley) and I are always writing new music. For most of our career, whether or not that music gets heard by most people has usually depended on which came first, the record deal or the songs. For quite awhile now, we've had a good ongoing relationship with Warner Brothers and Rhino Records, which is a joint effort arrangement between our old label in the 70s. But these days, to get any new music widely heard, it's important to have that major distribution and promotion plan in place."

Bunnell, with Beckley, has been one of America's two main vocalists for three decades. The 51-year-old singer/guitarist possesses the huskier, country-twang voice of the two singers, heard on "A Horse With No Name," "Ventura Highway" and "Tin Man" and somewhat similar to that of Stephen Stills, which drew America sometimes overstated comparisons to Crosby Stills & Nash during the 70s. Beckley's voice has a more crys-

Dance party gala a tribute to those serving abroad

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

Call it a dance party for defense of the homeland.

This Saturday, March 1, the VFW Hall on Rt. 138 — Washington Street in Stoughton will host a dance-party gala featuring two of the South Shore's best rock and pop dance-jam bands, Joe Kidd & the Force and Midlife Crisis.

Paul Papetti of Pyramid Productions in Brockton is promoting the event and both bands promise to rock the house with solid, high-energy music of both original and cover material, the latter including choice offerings by the likes of Stevie Ray Vaughan, the Allman Brothers, Eric Clapton, B.B. King and others plus a variety of classic rock dance music. In addition, event organizer Joe Fernandez, of Easton, will set the theme and color of the show as a tribute to the U.S. Military troops, many of whom are expected to be either shipping out to the Middle East or beginning their engagement in battle there by the date of this event. Fernandez is also offering a 50 percent discount on the admission price for any customers with an active Military I.D., including all four service branches plus the Coast Guard, National Guard and Reservists.

"Let's Rally and Send Off Our Troops, Wishing Them All a Safe Return!," says Fernandez in publicizing the event.

Fernandez is also Joe Kidd, singer, guitarist and front man with the Force, the headliner band for Saturday's dance-party show. The 42-year-old singer/musician is a veteran of the South Shore area club-music scene, forming his current band as a return vehicle a few years ago when he re-entered the local music-biz fray after a long hiatus. Fernandez/Kidd is also an independent music promoter and handles most of his own booking and management for his band's shows.

"It's been about four years since I was playing out and it feels great to be back," said Fernandez. "I missed the excitement and release of being onstage and fronting a good, rockin'-out band behind me."

During the 1980s, Fernandez, then living in Stoughton, worked at various levels of the music business, from playing as a solo-acoustic act in lounges and dinner theatres, local and otherwise, and opening for artists such as Crystal Gayle at the Tropicana and Bobby Rydell at the Dunes Casino in Las Vegas. He then switched to rock, fronting a number of Boston area club bands including his current group The Force, which in the last few years has landed opening spots in concert for such headliners as Meatloaf, James Montgomery and John Entwistle at the Orpheum and Paradise Theatres in Boston.

"It's been about four years since I was playing out and it feels great to be back. I missed the excitement and release of being onstage and fronting a good, rockin'-out band behind me."
Joe (Kidd) Fernandez

Along with Fernandez, The Force includes bassist/singer Bobby Dee, of Hanson; keyboardist/singer Scott O'Brien, of Quincy; saxophonist/flutist Bruce McGrath, of Middleboro; drummer/percussionist Jeff Armstrong, of Halifax; and guitarist/singer Steve Denny, of Quincy.

The VFW show is one of a series of dance-party events that Fernandez is planning to book and promote with his band and others throughout this year, in the South Shore and Boston areas and even as far as Rhode Island and New York State.

Weeknight cassoulet

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Cassoulet, the traditional French dish of beans and meat — usually pork, duck confit, and sausage — is cooked very slowly to allow the flavors to meld. It can be dry, heavy, and salty, but when prepared properly, it is juicy and succulent without being overbearing. The problem, of course, is that this dish is inordinately time consuming making it unsuitable for anyone other than an intrepid retiree.

The first step was to simplify the ingredient list and shorten the cooking time. Gone was the duck or goose confit and the long, slow simmering. Instead, I opted for quicker cooking chicken thighs (they stay moist even when overcooked) and Italian sausage. The first issue to resolve was how to prepare the beans. After some testing, I decided to pre-cook the beans and then build the finished dish. (Although overnight soaking does produce slightly plumper beans, the difference is marginal.) I wanted to infuse flavor into the beans during cooking so I added a small onion studded with whole cloves, a bay leaf, and salt to the cooking water. The cooking takes about 45 minutes —I wanted my beans very tender not al dente — but you can leave the kitchen while the beans cook.

For the chicken, bone-in, skinless chicken thighs worked best. I found that the skin becomes gummy during braising and that the thighs do not lose any moisture or flavor prepared skinless. I found that brining (soaking in salted water to add flavor and moisture) did not make much difference in this dish since the thighs are braised which infuses them with flavor.

I thought that the dish needed one more type of meat and I opted for pork. At first, I rendered fat from a few slices of bacon and then used the fat to brown the chicken and the bacon to garnish the finished dish. I then tried using sweet Italian sausage removed from its casing in place of the bacon; this was a major improvement since it added depth of flavor and texture, making the dish hearty and rustic.

The liquid I preferred was 1/2 cup of white wine and three cups of chicken stock. The water used to cook the beans had a taste which was overpowering and unwelcome and plain water didn't add enough taste or body. Additions which made the cut were onion, carrot, and a couple of tablespoons of tomato paste for flavor and color — actual chopped tomato seemed out of place. Finally, I added a bit of fresh rosemary during the last 10 minutes of cooking although you could try either fresh sage or thyme. The dish is garnished with a generous portion of chopped parsley.

QUICK CASSOULET

A word of caution about the beans. Do not undercook them. They will not soften much when cooked with the meat so they should be just shy of soft after precooking. There is nothing worse than half-cooked beans in this sort of dish.

1 pound great northern or navy beans picked over and rinsed

1 small onion peeled and studded with 8 whole cloves plus one medium onion cut into 1/2-inch dice

1 bay leaf

3/4 teaspoon salt plus additional salt for seasoning the chicken

1/2 pound sweet Italian sausage removed from casing and crumbled

8 bone-in chicken thighs, skin removed

Freshly ground black pepper

1 tablespoon olive oil

1 medium carrot, peeled and cut into 1/2-inch dice

2 cloves garlic, finely mined or pressed

1/2 cup white wine

2 tablespoons tomato paste

3 cups chicken stock

1 tablespoon chopped fresh rosemary

1/4 cup chopped flat leaf parsley

1. In a large saucepan combine the beans, onion studded with cloves, bay leaf and 3/4 teaspoon salt with 6 cups water. Bring to a boil over medium-high heat, reduce the heat to maintain a simmer, partially cover and cook for 45 minutes or until just tender. Discard the clove-studded onion.

2. Place a large Dutch oven over medium-high heat. Add the sausage and brown well on all sides, breaking apart any large pieces with a spatula. Remove with a slotted spoon and set on paper towels to drain. Pour off all but 1 tablespoon of fat. (Some sausage is very lean and may not render much fat.) Season the chicken with salt and pepper and brown well on both sides in batches if necessary. Remove and reserve.

3. Adjust the heat to medium and add the olive oil. Add the chopped onion and carrot and cook until soft, stirring occasionally, 5 to 7 minutes. Add the garlic and cook for an additional 2 minutes. Add the white wine and scrape browned bits from bottom of pan. Add the tomato paste and stir to combine. Drain beans and add them to the Dutch oven along with the chicken, sausage, and chicken stock. Bring to a boil, reduce the heat to maintain a simmer and cook, covered, for 20 to 30 minutes or until chicken thighs are cooked to an internal temperature of 165 degrees. Add the rosemary and cook for 10 minutes more or until the beans and chicken are very tender. At this point if the braising liquid is very thin, simmer uncovered for a few minutes more. Season to taste with salt and pepper. (Add liberal amounts of both.) Serve immediately, garnished with the chopped parsley. Serves 4-6.

garden centers, crafters and floral designers will transform the science center into a springtime fantasy.

The Spring Flower Show Weekend begins Friday night, Feb. 28, with the annual "Spring Stirrings" benefit preview reception and silent auction. Guests will enjoy culinary treats at tasting stations from caterers around the South Shore and take in the lovely surroundings while listening to live jazz music provided by Standard Deviation. "Spring Stirrings" takes place from 7-10 p.m. Tickets are $55 per person.

The next day, the Flower show opens at 9:30 a.m. and runs until 5:30 p.m. Admission is $5 adults, $3 children. The all day horticultural workshops run from 9:30 a.m. until 4 p.m. and are $12 per session or $40 for all four sessions.

Reid said the day of workshops has been the most ambitious undertaking for Flower Show organizers yet.

"These workshops are very informative. Things like gardening in a small space, finding out what's involved in having a water feature will be covered," said Reid.

Experts will also discuss the care and "demystification" of Orchids and landscape design.

On Sunday, March 2, the Flower Show will run from 10 a.m. until 2 p.m. and admission is $5 for adults and $3 for children. In addition to the show, gardening and craft demonstrations are included with admission. An herbal gift demonstration and a children's garden demonstration will also take place during that day.

Also on Sunday, the "Spring Tea-se," a special tea nestled among the gardens at the science center, begins at 3:30 p.m. The cost for the tea is $15 and includes admission to the Flower Show.

New to the flower show this year is a display of homemade Troll Houses as part of the science center's Fairy and Troll House competition. Entrants have used natural elements such as leaves, dried grasses, dried or fresh flowers, pine cones, twigs, mosses and bark to build fanciful houses for a fairy, woodland troll or other creature of the imagination. Awards will be given for the best adult and child entry.

Reid said the contest is very popular.

"The nice thing about this is people who come to the Flower Show can see these creations and we will have handouts available on how to create them at home. It's a wonderful activity to do with young children with materials from the backyard," she said.

Reid said she expects a good turnout for the Flower Show.

"I think we're all ready for a little spring right about now," she said.

talline tone, heard on other hits such as "I Need You," "Only In Your Heart" and "Sister Golden Hair."

The three original members of America met in England in the late 60s, as sons of U.S. servicemen stationed overseas, and took their name from the Americana jukebox in the military base cafeteria where two of the members worked. But one of Bunnell's favorite early stories is how the band hooked up with such a reputable producer as Martin.

"We needed to start working with a producer around '74, until which point we'd mostly been producing our records ourselves. And we were young and brash," Bunnell explained. "So around Grammy time George (Martin) was in L.A., with an award nomination for producing "Live and Let Die" with Paul McCartney the year before. And our manager at the time, David Geffen, arranged to introduce him to us when the opportunity came up. We had five good albums and a great relationship with George after that."

More recently, Bunnell has enjoyed songwriting success in the secondhand form of Janet Jackson's hit "Someone To Call My Lover," which prominently samples the bouncy acoustic guitar riff of Bunnell's composition "Ventura Highway." The America singer/guitarist shares a songwriting credit on the tune through a special licensing deal with Jackson producers Jimmy Jam and Terry Lewis.

"I think their using samples of our music has done a lot to help bring our presence to light with younger audiences. We've had a lot more hits on our Web site since Janet's (Jackson's) song hit the airwaves," Bunnell said.

Bunnell added that America's show in Plymouth will offer a balanced mix of the old hits and newer songs plus a few surprises, such as a suite piece coupling the band's hit ballad "I Need You" with George Harrison's more up-tempo tune of the same title that he sang with the Beatles, in a tribute to the late Fab Four member.

America will perform at Memorial Hall in Plymouth, Friday, Feb. 28 at 7:30 p.m. Tickets are available at.ticketweb.com, by telephone to TicketWeb via toll free 866-468-7619 (all major credit cards are accepted), in person at Loretta LaRoche & Company, 50 Court Street, Route 3A, Plymouth, MA from 10 a.m. — 2 p.m., Monday through Friday, and at Plymouth Memorial Hall on the night of the performance as available.

Visions of springtime

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

As Mother Nature gradually erases the mountainous heaps of snow that buried our landscapes only a week ago, I dream of the hidden beauty of springtime just waiting to burst forth from beneath the melting slushy snow cover. Torrential downpours and milder temperatures seem destined to quickly wash away our memories of this monumental holiday blizzard. Was it only a year ago that drought and water restrictions dominated every gardener's vision of spring?

Desperate to escape this year's perpetual winter wonderland, I traveled south in search of spring. The sweet perfume of heavenly hyacinths mingled with the fresh scent of pine bark mulch as I passed through the doorway of the Rhode Island Convention Center leaving the snow, ice and winter behind and stepped into the wondrous sights, sounds and fragrances of springtime. Pretty primroses, handsome hostas, luscious lilies, and wonderful woodland wildflowers were just a few of the horticultural delights on display at the Rhode Island Spring Flower Show this past weekend.

I spent hours mesmerized by glorious slides of flower-filled landscapes as an impressive lineup of prestigious speakers presented programs on a diverse range of horticultural topics. Lectures featuring hardy perennial geraniums, elegant astilbes, spectacular scenes from remote areas of China and Chile, and an outstanding presentation on landscape design rejuvenated my gardening spirit.

While snow and chilly weather may limit outdoor activities, most gardeners are already preparing for a new growing season. The months of February and March are an ideal time to begin planning new gardens or redesigning overgrown landscapes. Our local spring flower shows offer a wonderful opportunity to explore a variety of garden styles. From formal gardens adorned with statuary, urns and geometric designs to naturalistic woodland gardens and seascapes, there is always an exhibit which is sure to inspire and might suggest an appropriate theme garden for your own property. Mark your calendar for the New England Spring Flower Show sponsored by the Massachusetts Horticultural Society at the Bayside Expo, March 15-23. This year's theme, "The Garden Journey", is sure to suggest ideas for your personal landscape as well as providing a welcome breath of springtime splendor.

The brilliant red twigs of the variegated red-twigged dogwood are electrifying during the dormant winter months against an evergreen background, a blanket of snow, a white fence, or in a foundation planting.

Although a landscape should offer beauty in all seasons, planting for winter interest should be a priority. During the spring and summer months, our meadows, roadsides and woodlands allow us to enjoy nature's beauty with the greening of the landscape and the flowering of our native plants. Gardeners enhance this kaleidoscope of color by adding ornamental trees, shrubs and flowers to our personal spaces. Autumn brings the brilliant colors of the changing leaves, but winter tends to be dreary, gray and void of color just at a time when we need it most.

As you analyze your landscape at this time of year, consider the view from the street, the driveway, walkways, and from within your home. Take a series of photographs of your home and gardens from different angles and at various times during the day. During the dormant winter season, scenery tends to be observed from a kitchen window, a favorite sitting area, beside a walkway, entryway or along the driveway or street. Strategic placement of colorful winter plantings this spring will greatly enhance these views and lift your spirits throughout the year.

Evergreen trees and shrubs provide a dramatic contrast to the drab browns and grays of winter or a blanket of snow. Consider a variety of different colored evergreens combining blues, yellows and coppers with the diversity of greens. Blend, contrast and repeat textures and colors, using the smooth, shiny foliages of rhododendron, mountain laurel, holly, and leucothoe with the coarser textures of false cypress, arborvitae, and the fine needles of dwarf white pine or hemlock. The blue tones of junipers, blue Atlas cedar, and blue spruce combine beautifully with the yellow and copper tints of Rheingold arborvitae, gold thread cypress or any of the variegated varieties of euonymus. The deep, lustrous, bronze hues of azaleas and PJM rhododendrons are attractive companions to these blue and gold tones at this time of year.

Fruit-bearing shrubs and trees offer excellent sources of brilliant color during the fall and winter months, at least until Mother Nature's creatures strip them of their bounty. Hollies and crabapples are particularly noteworthy providing multiple seasons of interest. The brilliant red twigs of the variegated red-twigged dogwood are electrifying during the dormant winter months against an evergreen background, a blanket of snow, a white fence, or in a foundation planting. Equally pleasing are the bright golden branches of the variegated, yellow-twigged dogwood. As the branches of these vigorous shrubs mature, the older bark tends to lose its vibrancy and a major renewal pruning in early spring is recommended to rejuvenate and promote new growth that will demonstrate the fabulous winter color in late autumn. The addition of bold clumps of ornamental grasses provide texture, motion and sound during the latter half of the summer through the winter months. A well-planned design that provides color and textural contrasts during the winter months becomes a landscape for all seasons.

As I clipped a few dormant branches of forsythia to force into bloom indoors, I noticed that the silvery, silken catkins have emerged on the contorted branches of the Japanese fantail willow. Despite Mother Nature's persistent reminders that the winter season is far from over, a few harbingers of spring are beginning to offer promise that springtime flowers may soon appear.

LISTEN To Life

by John Klefeker, BC-HIS
Board Certified-Hearing Instrument Specialist, MA Lic. #127

GOING DIGITAL

Digital hearing instruments contain advanced circuitry that converts sound into digital signals, analyzes the sound, and creates a signal that is more finely tuned to the wearer's hearing loss. This is quite advantageous because hearing loss does not usually occur to the same degree across changing frequencies/pitches. Due to changing hearing levels at different frequencies, each specific frequency needs a different amount of amplification. Digital hearing instruments separate the frequency response into bands and channels, which can be manipulated independently, customizing the hearing instrument response to the wearer's specific hearing loss. They can also examine the sound environment and adapt the amplification accordingly without adding noise or distortion. Most experts value the flexibility of these instruments.

Although more sophisticated and technologically advanced than ever before, today's hearing aids keep one simple goal in mind – to help the hearing impaired hear better! Hearing aids of today are getting smaller and smaller, but their benefits are getting bigger and broader. See the digital and other tiny wonders available at FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER, conveniently located in Weymouth at 534 Main Street (Rte. 18), across from the Stetson Bldg. PH: 781-337-1144. We offer FREE hearing evaluations, FREE batteries for the life of any hearing instrument purchased, and FREE repairs of any make of hearing aid.

P.S. According to a recent survey, people with programmable or digital instruments seem to be more satisfied with their instruments than people with conventional instruments.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, FEB. 26

Read yesterday's advice. The moon continues to travel in Capricorn, active throughout the day. In addition, Mercury forms harmonious contacts to Pluto today and Saturn on Friday. This influence is ideal for handling projects that require study, investigation or research. You can cut through obstacles and get to the heart of a matter. The green light for new starts remains on.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 27

Get an early start to this day. Plan to initiate new activities before 7:58 a.m., when the Capricorn moon aligns with Venus and becomes inactive. Handle routine chores and finish projects already begun until 2:24 p.m., when the moon enters Aquarius. The remainder of the day rates high for new beginnings in your business or personal life. An applying alignment of Mercury and Saturn aids jobs that require mental precision and attention to detail. You can get work projects out of the way in short time.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 28

The Aquarius moon aligns with Jupiter at 8:41 a.m. and Neptune at 12:05 p.m., generating an upbeat, easy-going mood. Don't take on more than you can handle. Avoid making impulsive purchases, promises. This is a wonderful day for vacationing, enjoying favorite sports, hobbies, friends. Take extra time out for yourself; kick back, relax and enjoy life to the fullest.

SATURDAY, MARCH 1

The planet Uranus takes the spotlight this month. Uranus will enter the sign Pisces, remaining there until March 2011. It will bring unexpected opportunities and new freedom, particularly for people born under the sun sign Pisces.

Today the moon continues active travel in Aquarius until 9:30 p.m., when it aligns with Uranus. This is a time when people are more likely to reach out and network with others to achieve their goals. The final windup to this month's new moon begins at 10:26 p.m., when the moon enters Pisces.

SUNDAY, MARCH 2

Plan a quiet day. Unplug from daily routines; spend time alone. The dark side of a new moon is in full force and effect until 9:35 p.m. At this time the sun and moon conjoin at 12-degrees of the sign Pisces. Venus enters Aquarius at 7:40 a.m., remaining there until March 27. This period is prime for meeting people, developing new relationships.

MONDAY, MARCH 3

Although the new moon has culminated, it is best to hold off on new starts for a couple of days. Today the Pisces moon forms stressful contacts to Pluto at 12:36 p.m. and Saturn at 5:14 p.m. Others may be pensive, moody. There may be delays, obstacles. Stay alert and use common sense. Applying alignments of Mars and Mercury to Uranus prompt you to look for new solutions, make alternative plans, keep your options open.

TUESDAY, MARCH 4

A lunar alignment to Mars can make for a rough start to this day. Sidestep morning hassles. Take it slow and easy. At 8:04 a.m. the Pisces moon becomes inactive until 8:30 a.m., when it enters Aries. Mercury and Uranus conjoin at 4:16 p.m. This is an ideal influence for taking on a new study or brainstorming. Go with your instincts; be original. The planet Mars moves into Capricorn at 4:17 p.m., remaining there until April 21. At 9:04 p.m.

the green light for new starts goes on, when Mercury moves into Pisces. Mercury travels in Pisces until March 21.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 5

An Aries moon sets a fast pace today and tomorrow. You can be most productive, if you carefully organize your time and stick to your game plan. New starts in your business or personal life are recommended. Explore options, make long-range plans and set new goals. Get back in the swing of favorite sports and exercise programs.

THURSDAY, MARCH 6

Yesterday's planetary influences continue today. The Aries moon forms harmonious contacts to planets until 8:10 p.m., when it aligns with Uranus. Roll up your sleeves and plan to get a lot accomplished. Zero in on jobs that require physical labor and exertion. At 8:36 p.m. the moon enters Taurus, and forms a harmonious contact to Mars at 11:35 p.m. Love is the name of the game this evening.

FRIDAY, MARCH 7

It may be difficult to get back to business today. The moon travels in Taurus, forming 90-degree alignments to Venus in the morning, Jupiter in the afternoon and Neptune in the evening. That means that this is a great day to hang out, relax, enjoy favorite pastimes and friends. On the other hand, don't overdo, overindulge, spend money on impulse. Sleep on new ideas and postpone taking action for a few days.

LISTEN To Life

by John Klefeker, BC-HIS
Board Certified-Hearing Instrument Specialist, MA Lic. #127

GOING DIGITAL

Digital hearing instruments contain advanced circuitry that converts sound into digital signals, analyzes the sound, and creates a signal that is more finely tuned to the wearer's hearing loss. This is quite advantageous because hearing loss does not usually occur to the same degree across changing frequencies/pitches. Due to changing hearing levels at different frequencies, each specific frequency needs a different amount of amplification. Digital hearing instruments separate the frequency response into bands and channels, which can be manipulated independently, customizing the hearing instrument response to the wearer's specific hearing loss. They can also examine the sound environment and adapt the amplification accordingly without adding noise or distortion. Most experts value the flexibility of these instruments.

Although more sophisticated and technologically advanced than ever before, today's hearing aids keep one simple goal in mind – to help the hearing impaired hear better! Hearing aids of today are getting smaller and smaller, but their benefits are getting bigger and broader. See the digital and other tiny wonders available at FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER, conveniently located in Weymouth at 534 Main Street (Rte. 18), across from the Stetson Bldg. PH: 781-337-1144. We offer FREE hearing evaluations, FREE batteries for the life of any hearing instrument purchased, and FREE repairs of any make of hearing aid.

P.S. According to a recent survey, people with programmable or digital instruments seem to be more satisfied with their instruments than people with conventional instruments.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, FEB. 26

Read yesterday's advice. The moon continues to travel in Capricorn, active throughout the day. In addition, Mercury forms harmonious contacts to Pluto today and Saturn on Friday. This influence is ideal for handling projects that require study, investigation or research. You can cut through obstacles and get to the heart of a matter. The green light for new starts remains on.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 27

Get an early start to this day. Plan to initiate new activities before 7:58 a.m., when the Capricorn moon aligns with Venus and becomes inactive. Handle routine chores and finish projects already begun until 2:24 p.m., when the moon enters Aquarius. The remainder of the day rates high for new beginnings in your business or personal life. An applying alignment of Mercury and Saturn aids jobs that require mental precision and attention to detail. You can get work projects out of the way in short time.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 28

The Aquarius moon aligns with Jupiter at 8:41 a.m. and Neptune at 12:05 p.m., generating an upbeat, easy-going mood. Don't take on more than you can handle. Avoid making impulsive purchases, promises. This is a wonderful day for vacationing, enjoying favorite sports, hobbies, friends. Take extra time out for yourself; kick back, relax and enjoy life to the fullest.

SATURDAY, MARCH 1

The planet Uranus takes the spotlight this month. Uranus will enter the sign Pisces, remaining there until March 2011. It will bring unexpected opportunities and new freedom, particularly for people born under the sun sign Pisces.

Today the moon continues active travel in Aquarius until 9:30 p.m., when it aligns with Uranus. This is a time when people are more likely to reach out and network with others to achieve their goals. The final windup to this month's new moon begins at 10:26 p.m., when the moon enters Pisces.

SUNDAY, MARCH 2

Plan a quiet day. Unplug from daily routines; spend time alone. The dark side of a new moon is in full force and effect until 9:35 p.m. At this time the sun and moon conjoin at 12-degrees of the sign Pisces. Venus enters Aquarius at 7:40 a.m., remaining there until March 27. This period is prime for meeting people, developing new relationships.

MONDAY, MARCH 3

Although the new moon has culminated, it is best to hold off on new starts for a couple of days. Today the Pisces moon forms stressful contacts to Pluto at 12:36 p.m. and Saturn at 5:14 p.m. Others may be pensive, moody. There may be delays, obstacles. Stay alert and use common sense. Applying alignments of Mars and Mercury to Uranus prompt you to look for new solutions, make alternative plans, keep your options open.

TUESDAY, MARCH 4

A lunar alignment to Mars can make for a rough start to this day. Sidestep morning hassles. Take it slow and easy. At 8:04 a.m. the Pisces moon becomes inactive until 8:30 a.m., when it enters Aries. Mercury and Uranus conjoin at 4:16 p.m. This is an ideal influence for taking on a new study or brainstorming. Go with your instincts; be original. The planet Mars moves into Capricorn at 4:17 p.m., remaining there until April 21. At 9:04 p.m.

the green light for new starts goes on, when Mercury moves into Pisces. Mercury travels in Pisces until March 21.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 5

An Aries moon sets a fast pace today and tomorrow. You can be most productive, if you carefully organize your time and stick to your game plan. New starts in your business or personal life are recommended. Explore options, make long-range plans and set new goals. Get back in the swing of favorite sports and exercise programs.

THURSDAY, MARCH 6

Yesterday's planetary influences continue today. The Aries moon forms harmonious contacts to planets until 8:10 p.m., when it aligns with Uranus. Roll up your sleeves and plan to get a lot accomplished. Zero in on jobs that require physical labor and exertion. At 8:36 p.m. the moon enters Taurus, and forms a harmonious contact to Mars at 11:35 p.m. Love is the name of the game this evening.

FRIDAY, MARCH 7

It may be difficult to get back to business today. The moon travels in Taurus, forming 90-degree alignments to Venus in the morning, Jupiter in the afternoon and Neptune in the evening. That means that this is a great day to hang out, relax, enjoy favorite pastimes and friends. On the other hand, don't overdo, overindulge, spend money on impulse. Sleep on new ideas and postpone taking action for a few days.

Train stalls town work

Delay puts projects off

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

A six-month delay in construction on the Greenbush commuter line has put four town projects in limbo.

Town Manager Mark Haddad put the projects on hold Tuesday after meeting with MBTA officials who said reimbursement could not be guaranteed for any Greenbush mitigation projects.

"The official word is that everything's on hold for 60 days pending a review of the Greenbush project by Gov. Romney and Secretary of Transportation Daniel Grabauskas," Haddad said. "We're in a holding

Lighter tax override likely

Trimmed down some $135,000

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Town officials hope to lower the amount of a proposition 2-1/2 general override from $485,000 to $350,000.

Officials agreed tentatively on the reduced figure last week after looking at reductions in local aid outlined in Gov. Mitt Romney's version of the state's budget. Town Manager Mark Haddad said Romney's budget proposal amounted to a loss of $307,000, or a 10.9 percent reduction in local aid for Cohasset in fiscal year 2004.

The town had originally budgeted for a 10 percent cut in local aid, a move that was questioned by some in the face of rumors of cuts as high as 20 percent.

Last Thursday, Haddad told members of the Board of Selectmen, the School Committee, and the Advisory Committee that if the override remained unchanged, no further cuts would be necessary.

He said that although the local aid reduction was almost 1 percent higher than anticipated in the budget, the difference had been offset by adjustments to estimated receipts and a recent $20,000 increase in revenue from new growth.

But Selectmen and School Committee members said a $485,000 override was simply too much to ask from voters, especially given the lagging economy. After Haddad noted the town's last two overrides were $300,000 and $380,000, they agreed on a new override figure of $350,000.

The new override figure would amount to a 21 cent increase in the tax rate. The average taxpayer, considered the owner of a $575,800 home, would pay an additional $121 in property taxes. The $485,000 override amounted to a 29 cent tax rate increase and would have cost the average taxpayer $168.

The override needs two-thirds approval at Town Meeting on March 29 to go to a town-wide vote. A final figure for the override must be set by March 7, when the warrant for Town Meeting goes to print.

Hingham Lumber has new home

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Hingham Lumber opened for business this week at its new home in Cohasset.

It may only be short ride down Route 3A from the company's old facility in Hingham, but the complicated move has been 10 years in the making.

Owners Thomas and John McNulty are glad to finally be settling down. Their new home has allowed them to expand their business dramatically but maintain the level of personalized service that sets them apart from the competition.

"Everybody's excited," said Thomas McNulty. "This was a huge culmination between the townspeople who helped at getting us through the boards in a reasonable and timely fashion, our customers who persevered through what we had down there (in Hingham) during the last year and a half our so, and certainly our employees who have done a tremendous job working longer hours than typical."

"Initially it was hard to comprehend that we'd be moving from the existing site. After all, it was started by my father in '47."
— Thomas McNulty

The new Hingham Lumber sits on a 13-acre parcel of land on Route 3A next to Cohasset Collision Center. The land used to be the site of a golf driving range.

The McNulty brothers first contemplated moving in the early 1990s when the MBTA showed interest in their Summer Street property in

Selectmen name Charles to CPC

Selectmen last week unanimously voted to appoint Margy Charles to the Community Preservation Committee. Charles will fill a vacancy made when David McMorris resigned from the committee in January.

Selectmen Merle Brown and Ronnie McMorris recommended Charles for the position after interviewing several qualified candidates. Brown and McMorris supported Charles because of her strong background in community housing, one of three areas that money from the Community Preservation fund is supposed to benefit. The other areas, which McMorris felt were already well represented on the committee, are open space and historical preservation.

The appointment was not without controversy. Selectman Thomas Callahan, who is also a member of the CPC, opposed McMorris' premise that the committee was weak in the area of community housing. He noted that the largest project the CPC has supported to date — a plan to appropriate $300,000 for two "moderate income" apartments in the basement of the old library — is a housing project. Callahan accused McMorris of "playing politics" because the CPC turned down a large proposal from the Senior Housing Authority, which her and Charles both serve on.

Master Plan talk is at 7:30 p.m. tonight

The Cohasset Growth and Development Committee is holding a Master Plan discussion focusing on Environment, Open Space and Cultural Preservation on Thursday March 6 at 7:30 p.m. in the Town Hall Auditorium. All are welcome to come and put their ideas into action for the Master Plan.

Discussion will include strategies to preserve and enhance Cohasset's environmental sustainability, natural landscapes, open space, and scenic and historic character. For more information, please contact Liz Harrington, Town Planner, at 781-383-3517.

Register to vote

Any citizen of the United States who is a Massachusetts resident and who will be 18 years old on or before a town meeting or Election Day may register to vote. There is no waiting period to be eligible to register to vote. If you move, you may register to vote as soon as you move into your new home.

Registration is closed for a brief period before town meeting and election to allow election officials time to prepare the voting lists. If you register during a "closed" period, you will be eligible to vote only in later town meetings or elections. The last day to register to vote is Friday, March 7 from 8:30 a.m. to 8 p.m. at the Town Clerk's office for the Annual Town Meeting, Saturday, March 29 and the Annual Town Election, Saturday, April 5. Mail-in registration forms are available from the Town Clerk's office, Cohasset Post Office and Paul Pratt Memorial Library and must be postmarked on or before March7.

Ellms Meadow bids solicited for project

The Water Commission has requested bids from contractors for the next round of improvements to the water distribution system, for a new pump and pumphouse for the Ellms Meadow Wellfield, and for relocating the Sohier Street Wells away from the Greenbush railroad right of way.

"These projects will improve fire protection and water service throughout Cohasset," said John McNabb, chairman of the Water Commission. "The distribution system projects will improve about 1.54 miles of water mains on South Main Street, North Main Street, Bancroft Road, Hill Street, Parker Ave., and Doane Street, which are areas we have identified as having insufficient fire flow or problems with water service.

"Bid proposals are due by March 13, so by the time of the March 29 Town Meeting, where we will seek funding for these projects, we will have good information about their costs," he said, "and so we will be able to begin these needed projects soon after the conclusion of the Town Meeting."

The Ellms Meadow Pumphouse project includes demolition of the existing pumphouse, relocation of the old pump, construction of a new pumphouse, installation of a new pump and instrumentation, and connection of the pump to the water distribution system.

In the Sohier Street Well Field exploratory project, the contractor will drill exploratory wells behind Sohier Street to find a location that is suitable for the new wellfield, so the existing wells located 50 feet from the Greenbush Railroad right of way can be moved. This project is supposed to be reimbursed by the MBTA as part of its mitigation package for Cohasset.

Securing its place in history

Cemetery is on National Register

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Cemeteries, especially ancient ones, tell old stories.

Just take a walk through Cohasset Central Cemetery at Joy Place where the oldest grave dates back to 1705. There you'll also find the Celtic Cross memorializing the 45 unidentified victims of the brig St. John disaster 150 years ago; the grave of world renowned acrobat William Hanlon (of the Hanlon Brothers); and the grave of the Rev. Nehemiah Hobart, the town's first clergyman — to name a few.

But thanks to the efforts of cemetery trustees — in particular Anne Montague and Jo Ann Ford who did much of the research on the application with the help to town archivist David Wadsworth and Deirdre Barrett, who researched the gravestone art — the cemetery has a new story to tell. The beautiful, peaceful place with its glacial moraines and views of Little Harbor is now officially a "national treasure" through its recent inclusion on the National Register of Historic Places.

Phil Bergen of the Massachusetts Historical Commission presented cemetery trustees with a certificate heralding the recent accomplishment Sunday during the cemetery's annual board meeting at the Lightkeepers Residence.

The National Register provides recognition that a property is of significance to the nation, state or the community. The designation also provides some protection and ensures the cemetery will be preserved.

Cohasset Central Cemetery with its funerary art by Colonial stone carvers like Scituate's Jacob Vinal and his son, Jacob Jr. — has long been a town treasure.

Bergen explained the effort to place a property on the National Register could take up to two years.

He said the application was affirmatively voted back in September at the state level before being sent to the National Park Service.

Wadsworth, who has drafted several National Register applications in town, praised the work of Montague and Ford.

"They did an absolutely marvelous job putting it together," he said.

The cemetery also had the good luck of being able to work with several Boston University students who provided consulting services on the project for free as part of their master's degree thesis. The state currently has no money to provide consultants, and therefore, the cemetery could still be on the waiting list if it weren't for the help from B.U.

"We filled out the application and they put it into the nomination form," Montague explained.

In addition to the honor of being listed, the designation will enable the cemetery to apply for grant money from the state Department of Environmental Management through a program aimed at providing funds to help maintain green spaces on the National Register and for preservation work in cemeteries.

Montague said the association's next effort is to create a guide so people who stroll through the cemetery can have a sense of the local history the picturesque place represents.

Friends, family remember Howorth

Helped girlfriend escape club blaze

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

He was a computer whiz who cheered up the lives of his co-workers. A die-hard heavy metal fan who idolized 80s rockers like Ted Nugent and Motley Crue. A loving father whose favorite pastime was watching "Scooby-Doo" and eating popcorn with his daughter.

That was how Carlton "Buddy" Howorth III was remembered by more than 150 friends and family who gathered in his memory last Thursday at the Second Congregational Church on Cohasset Common.

Howorth, 39, a longtime Cohasset resident, was one of 98 people killed in a fire two weeks ago during a rock concert at The Station nightclub in West Warwick, R.I. He assisted his girlfriend, Donna Reis, to safety in the moments before his death.

Howorth's sister, Susan Howorth Pritchard, said her brother had died doing what he loved—listening to live heavy metal music.

"Unfortunately, this tragedy has allowed us to understand how many lives Buddy touched," she told the crowd. "He was a caring son, a devoted father, a loving brother and uncle, and in his last moments, a hero...His unique personality completed our family."

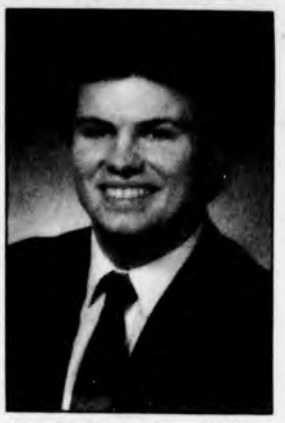
Howorth Pritchard recalled how Howorth enjoyed spending time with his three-year-old daughter, Elizabeth, and how he had fought to overcome Hodgkin's Disease five years ago with the help of his dog, Maggie.

"He was always smiling, always ready to help," said friend and co-worker Frank Pellicano.

Pellicano spoke of Howorth's unparalleled love for music. "Even at official business meetings, he would throw comments in about heavy metal bands," he said.

Pellicano drew laughter when he joked that he enjoyed talking to Howorth on the phone, but always made sure he put his kids to bed and went to the bathroom beforehand. "Everyone knew Bud was a talker," he said. "Whatever your problems were, Bud was there."

John MacLeman, another friend and co-worker, recalled how Howorth picked him up when he was having trouble enjoying his job. MacLeman said it was Howorth who introduced him to his wife. He said Howorth was filled with passion for his friends, his family and his music.



Carlton "Buddy" Howorth III

"His life was full every minute of every day," said Rev. Gary Ritts.

Rev. Ritts read from Howorth's entries in the Cohasset High School yearbook from 1981, the year of his graduation. He let Howorth's "parting statement" in the yearbook speak for itself: "Whatever you do, don't let the good times pass you by."

Ritts remembered Howorth with rock lyrics that captured his outgoing spirit. He closed with lyrics from a Motley Crue song: "Plug me in. I'm alive tonight....I'm hot, young, running free. A little bit better than I used to be."

Hingham Lumber has new home in Cohasset

Hingham as the future site of a parking lot for the Nantasket Junction station on the Greenbush commuter line. The news halted expansion plans on the site that had been delayed by legal battles with neighbors.

The company finalized plans to move to Cohasset in 2001. Thomas McNulty said coming to grips with the move was tough. "Initially it was hard to comprehend that we'd be moving from the existing site. After all, it was started by my father in '47," he said. "In the long run, looking back, it now makes a lot of sense, but looking at it then, it was never something we considered."

McNulty said the MBTA paid "a little bit more than the assessed value" of $761,000 for the Hingham property. The agency did not pay, however, for moving costs.

"Whenever you have to move, you'd like to get a total compensation for whatever it costs you to move, but that's not always a reality," he said. "That's what we would have liked, but we didn't get it. I don't think anybody did."

McNulty said the company paid about $10,000 per year in property taxes to the town of Hingham and would now pay about $60,000 per year to Cohasset because the new facility is much larger.

Although sad to leave Hingham, McNulty said the convenience of finding a plot of land only a mile and a half down the road made for a much smoother transition. "We're very lucky to have obtained the land. That helped a lot in keeping our business operational," he said.

McNulty said he's happy the company didn't rebuild on its old property only to find out the MBTA would take the land by eminent domain. "That would have been a most difficult situation for us," he said.

Instead of being a back-breaker, the move has proved to be an opportunity for growth.

McNulty said he expects business to grow by at least 10 percent at the new facility. The company now has a 24,000-square-foot building that houses the retail store, showroom and offices and a 60,000-square-foot lumber warehouse with drive-through service.

At look inside Hingham Lumber's expanded new facility which is now open 7 a.m.-7 p.m.

"I'd say we're certainly one of the most state-of-the-art operations in the northeast," McNulty said.

That's quite an accomplishment when compared to Hingham Lumber's old site, where old trailers from 18-wheelers served as storage and the retail area was more like a maze than a store. "It was really kind of pork-chopped," said McNulty. "It was like a house of cards, if you will."

With the move, areas that were limited by space at the Hingham site have grown exponentially. The showroom—where kitchens, doors and windows are on display—has gone from 200 square feet to 4,200 square feet. Meanwhile, the retail store has gone from 2,500 square feet to 14,500 square feet.

McNulty hopes an expanded product line will mean South Shore contractors will be stopping by more frequently, but he's also looking for business from motivated homeowners looking to make home improvements.

"I think the business itself is going to attract a different market," he said. "We were not very strong in the do-it-yourself or the retail trades because the business physically didn't dictate that. Anybody that visits will notice a big difference in that personality of the store."

New perks include beeper devices so customers can shop while they wait for paint to be mixed and a TV area in the showroom where kids can watch movies while their parents browse.

Hingham Lumber has also hired new staff in its showroom and retail departments. The company has grown from 50 to 65 employees because of the move.

The desire to attract more clientele has also led to expanded hours. Before, the company's hours were 7:15 a.m. to 4:30 p.m.; now it's open from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m., Monday through Saturday.

As owner of an independent lumberyard, McNulty says he's not intimidated by nationwide chains like Home Depot or Lowe's, what he calls "box" stores.

"With the proliferation of the 'box' stores, a lot of retailers have said, 'We're not going to do anything in the hardware area or the retail area,' which I think is a mistake," he said. "I think we service customers better than the big boxes and as a result I think its natural for us to offer the products that people want."

Hingham Lumber was started in 1947 by the McNultys' father, William McNulty, who built the business on a tradition of good customer service.

"We're a small company that still strives to keep that small company personality and attitude towards customers," said McNulty. "Any dealer in this business that performs those things is going to be successful."

Rave reviews for new library

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Whoever said libraries are supposed to be quiet, studious places wasn't in Cohasset on Sunday.

The Paul Pratt Memorial Library was a figurative beehive of activity as upwards of 200 residents traipsed through a torrential downpour for the new facility's open house.

Patience Towle, chairman of the Board of Library Trustees, couldn't stop smiling as she welcomed everyone into the renovated building that housed the former Osgood School for the better part of the last century.

"This is so exciting," said an energized Towle, as citizens of all ages poured through the front door.

Patience Towle, chairman of the library trustees, accepts congratulatory citations from the House and Senate from state Rep. Garrett Bradley during Sunday's open house.

Dozens of youngsters gravitated toward carrels with computers or the "pint-sized" stacks and furniture in the children's room that features a nautical motif. Others, with their eyes wide as they tried to take it all in, rode around on their dads' shoulders. Even the "old folks" in attendance seemed to be in awe as they wandered through.

Brian Riley, now 24, who went to grades K-3 at Osgood, tried to recall where the nurse's office, principal's office and his old Kindergarten room once stood.

"I don't recognize my old school," he said.

Town Moderator George Marlette, who was on hand for the festivities, said when he went to Derby Academy in Hingham the Hingham Public Library made him envious.

"I thought, 'why doesn't Cohasset have a library on a par with Hingham's?'" he said. "Now we do."

At 3 p.m., one-third way through the open house, Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan kicked off a brief ceremony in which he praised the community spirit that brought the new library to fruition.

"At a time when we're dealing with difficult challenges both fiscally and politically, it's nice to be participating in something so positive and uplifting," he said.

As he praised all those involved in the process, Sullivan said the library was an example of the same type of community spirit that propelled the town to build the Osgood School back in the 1920s. He said the library building committee had met two-to-three times a week since 1998 "to bring this beautiful project to the community."

"At a time when we're dealing with difficult challenges both fiscally and politically, it's nice to be participating in something so positive and uplifting."

— Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan

Deborah Hill Bornheimer of the Massachusetts Board of Library Commissioners – that awarded a $1.5 million state grant for the project — lives in Duxbury but grew up in Cohasset and attended the old Osgood School. She said the new library is "what dreams are made of."

She recalled 50 years ago when she was in Gertrude Young's second grade, the same year she got her first Paul Pratt Library card, which opened a new world for her.

"It wasn't here but over there at the library that my intellect formed and my imagination sparked," she said.

Quoting Margaret Meade, Library Director Janet Husband said one should "never doubt that a small group of thoughtful committed people can change the world: indeed it's the only thing that ever has.'

"This building is proof that is the case," said Husband, who was hired 5-1/2 years ago when the trustees were just beginning their work to secure the building for a new library.

"For me it's been a thrill to see the building turn from a paper construct into reality," she said.

Towle, the trustees president, said it was her "happy duty to thank everyone today." Her eyes welled with tears as she went down the list of names of fellow trustees, town officials, library staff, volunteers, and members of the construction and architectural team. She thank each one individually while she shared anecdotes about the challenges they faced.

State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, who presented congratulatory citations from the House and Senate recognizing the Herculean library effort [Sen. Hedlund was attending an Eagle Scout ceremony], came along with his daughter Amanda, who clutched a children's book and gently interrupted her dad to get him to read to her.

He said Cohasset should take great pride in its new library.

"It's is a gathering place for the community and speaks volumes for the town of Cohasset," he said.

Article seeks safer storage at Pilgrim

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

A large-scale accident would release 10 times more high-level radioactivity than the Chernobyl disaster in Russia, contaminating an area three times the size of Massachusetts.

Voters at Town Meeting will be asked to support a warrant article that would request safer storage of spent fuel rods at Pilgrim Nuclear Power Station in Plymouth.

If the article is approved, the Town would request the U.S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission to require the placement of all but recently unloaded spent nuclear fuel in secure, dry cask storage. The Town would also ask local, state and federal officials to support the measure.

"The reason we're requesting this is that terrorism is real," said Mary Lampert, chairwoman of the Duxbury Nuclear Advisory Committee. "We know that nuclear power plants are on the terrorists' short lists. The President told us that in his State of the Union two years ago."

Lampert spoke to Selectmen last week on behalf of Cohasset residents who support her efforts to improve safety at Pilgrim. It was those supporters who drafted the article for Town Meeting by citizens' petition. Selectmen voted unanimously to recommend the article. Lampert has submitted a similar article in Duxbury.

Lampert said Pilgrim Nuclear Power Station has 2,278 spent fuel rods in a storage pool designed to hold 880 rods. The pool is located in a tall building that houses the plant's main reactor, making it an especially attractive target for terrorists. By 2012, the plant will have almost 4,000 rods, she said.

Lampert said a large-scale accident would release 10 times more high-level radioactivity than the Chernobyl disaster in Russia, contaminating an area three times the size of Massachusetts.

Lampert's goal is to get the spent fuel rods placed in dry cask storage units, which would separate them into groups of about 2 dozen and allow them to be spread out, minimizing the chance of an accident.

"Pilgrim is on 1,600 wooded acres," she said. "They don't have to have all their eggs in one basket, so to speak, as is done now."

With the proposed federal nuclear repository at Yucca Mountain scheduled to open in 2010, transferring spent fuel into dry cask storage may be something Pilgrim has to do in the near future, anyway. The rods would require dry cask storage to be transported, although the waiting list to get into the repository could be as long as 30 to 40 years.

Lampert said waiting for Yucca didn't make sense, given the current threat.

"The sensible thing to do is to be prepared and to reduce the attractiveness of the target," she said. "Secure dry-cask storage is definitely the way to go."

Lampert estimates it would cost $71 million to place all of Pilgrim's spent fuel in dry cask storage. She said the cost — whether paid by the ratepayer or the taxpayer — would ultimately be picked up by Massachusetts residents no matter what.

Lampert said stepping up security at Pilgrim was also necessary. She said the only way to truly protect the plant would be to have on-site surface-to-air missiles and constant Coast Guard patrols.

"I have a swimming pool and I have to put a fence around it," she said. "They have a radioactive swimming pool and they have a no trespassing sign."

Lampert said emergency plans needed revision. "The current emergency plans are designed for accidents that are slow building," she said. "We want real emergency plans for communities we know will be affected."

Selectmen to tackle articles on Town Meeting Warrant

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Selectmen have postponed their meeting this week until today (Thursday) so they can make recommendations on several warrant articles after they are reviewed by the Planning Board. The meeting is at 7 p.m. in Town Hall.

The Planning Board holds a public hearing before each Town Meeting for all warrant articles that would make changes to the zoning bylaws. This year, the board did not schedule the hearing until Wednesday, March 5, two days before the warrant goes to print.

Five potential articles in this year's warrant involve zoning changes. One article calls for a building permit review process, one would tighten rules for ledge removal, one would give amnesty to "illegal" apartments if they were made affordable, and a another would make large houses trigger a site plan review and possibly require a special permit.

A fifth article, filed by citizens petition, would amend the zoning map so that the business district behind Stop and Shop would expand 200 feet further back from route 3A.

Five potential articles in this year's warrant involve zoning changes.

Selectmen were hoping to make recommendations on these articles at their meeting last week. They invited members of the Planning Board, who did not attend because they were unprepared to comment.

With the exception of citizen's petitions, Selectmen can vote to remove any article from the warrant. Because of that power, when a board or committee presents an article, Selectmen can offer opinions and negotiate changes or even postponement of the article until a future Town Meeting.

Other articles to be reviewed this week by Selectmen involve the fiscal year 2004 budget, funding recommendations from the Community Preservation Committee, funding for improvements to the sewer treatment plant, funding for improvements to the Police/Fire station and funding for a new school bus.

Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan said the town needed to put forward a strong effort to cut costs as much as it could without sacrificing services. "It has to be a joint effort that we all feel good about," he said. "I think we're close to the number where we know we want to be."

Because Haddad has already cut the municipal side of the budget by $21,000, Selectmen asked the schools to absorb $100,000 of the $135,000 that must now be eliminated from town's expenses to accommodate for the reduced override.

Haddad noted this week in his weekly report to Selectmen that the town will absorb the remaining $35,000 by temporarily reducing the emergency services fee that the fire department pays to the Water Commission, which operates independently.

The School Committee will discuss its portion of the cuts at its meeting today (Thursday) at 7 p.m. in the High School Library. The committee must also still cut $75,000 from its budget to pay for the cost of additional janitorial staff.

Sullivan reiterated at last Thursday's meeting that an override was important to maintaining the town's services. "We don't lightly bring forward an override. It's because we really feel that these are the services that the town wants to have," he said.

Selectman Tom Callahan said renegotiating the town's union contracts to eliminate $630,000 in pay raises should still be on the table in budget discussions. "If the unions played ball with us, we might not need an override," he said.

But School Committee members and other Selectmen said it was too late in the budget process to explore the plan. Some also said that only eliminating non-union raises would be unfair and that contract negotiations should be held across the board if they happen at all.

Sullivan said that when the town's union contracts expire after next fiscal year, pay raises might have to be eliminated for the first year of the new contracts. He also said solving budgetary problems by redesigning town government was not as easy as some might think.

"We can't drastically change how government is run in the town of Cohasset," he said. "I think people have to understand that. I think there's this perception out there that just because the state is radically changing the way government is run that we have to radically change the way the town is run, too."

Town officials are still unsure how Romney's cuts in local aid — provided they are approved by the Legislature — will play out over the next few years. Haddad pointed out that the Governor's plan actually cut more than $750,000, or about 25 percent, of the town's local aid, but replaced much of it with funds labeled as "transitional mitigation."

"They threw in $450,000 to soften the blow for fiscal year 2004," he said. "That money does not reappear in 2005."

According to Romney's budget, Cohasset's local aid reduction in fiscal year 2004 would be 10.5 percent — the largest cut allowed under the plan, which seeks to chip away at the state's $3 billion budget deficit. Haddad said Romney's numbers did not account for the 2.5 percent cut in local aid in fiscal year 2003, which is why Haddad's numbers showed the reduction was actually 10.9 percent.

The previous cut, made last month, amounted to a $58,000 loss that Haddad covered with the town's free cash, which totals about $300,000.

ZBA public hearing on 3 Jerusalem Lane nears

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Forget the local pub. Anyone looking for red faces on St. Patrick's Day, go straight to Town Hall.

That's when the Zoning Board of Appeals will hold a public hearing to decide whether to grant Phil and Mary Anne Ayer a special permit for their home at 3 Jerusalem Lane. The case has been a controversial topic around town for more than a month.

The Ayers' building permit was revoked in January when their home was 80 percent complete. Responding to an appeal from neighbors, the Zoning Board of Appeals determined the Ayers should have initially applied for a special permit because they were building on a non-conforming lot.

Two weeks ago, the Planning Board recommended that the Ayers' application for special permit be denied in accordance with the bylaws. The board said their home was detrimental to the neighborhood because it devalued neighboring homes by eliminating views of the ocean.

"If the neighbors were so worried about their views, they had the option of purchasing the lot just like anybody else did."
— Roberta Sawyer, Ayers' attorney

Roberta Sawyer, the Ayers' lawyer, said that claiming other properties had been devalued because their views were eliminated would not hold up in court.

"The Zoning Board of Appeals and the courts have consistently held that views are not protected absent view easements or protective bylaws — neither of which existed in this case," said Sawyer. "If the neighbors were so worried about their views, they had the option of purchasing the lot just like anybody else did."

Sawyer said she and her clients did not attend the Planning Board meeting two weeks ago because they were unaware it was taking place. She said she was not contacted by the Planning Board in advance of the meeting.

But member Bob Sturdy said the Planning Board never contacted permit applicants or others parties involved because it was not required.

"The process is standard," Sturdy said. "The meeting of the Planning Board is posted and the agenda is there for anyone who wants to see it."

Sturdy said the Planning Board traditionally issues recommendations on applications for special permits and variances before they go to the Zoning Board.

The Ayers' application for a special permit will now go before the Zoning Board on March 17 at 7:30 at Town Hall.

Also decided upon at that hearing will be Sawyer's request for enforcement on six homes that allegedly violate the same zoning bylaw as 3 Jerusalem Lane. Sawyer's initial request to force the homes to acquire special permits was denied by Building Inspector Bob Egan, who ruled that the Zoning Board's previous decision regarding the Ayers' home was not immediately applicable to any other case.

pattern…They're going to look at the Greenbush project and then make a decision on how to go forward."

Stalled are the James Brook Drainage Improvement Project, the reconstruction of the Town Parking Lot and the reconstruction of the Sohier Street Wells, all to be covered by MBTA mitigation funds at a total cost of about $1.75 million.

Although not funded by the MBTA, the Village Streetscape Revitalization Project has been put on hold as well. Haddad has told the Waterfield Design Group, in charge of the project, to cease all work for the time being.

"We're in a holding pattern."
— Town Manager Mark Haddad

Haddad said he stopped the streetscape project because he was unsure how town officials might want to proceed if Greenbush is abandoned. The $1.5 million Public Works Economic Development grant that would fund the streetscape improvements may end up being used for some mitigation projects, Haddad said.

"Selectmen may want to reconsider using some of that money for the Town Parking Lot since parking is such an issue in the village," he said.

Haddad is applying to MassHighway for a one-year extension on the PWED grant, which, as of now, the town must use by March of 2004.

In a letter to Haddad last week, MBTA design and construction manager David Ryan said "the MBTA remains fully committed to the completion of the (Greenbush) project."

But Haddad could not guarantee the future of the project after his meeting Tuesday. "It may still happen. It may not happen," he said. "I'm just sitting here waiting."

Since the MBTA is moving forward with design and permitting efforts, Haddad has requested that the agency continue to pay for the town ombudsman, Kristina Patterson.

"If they're going to continue design, then we're going to need to deal with reviewing those designs, so we're still going to need an ombudsman," he said.

FOR A GOOD CAUSE

The month of March can be very long, wet, cold and dreary so we have a few events in store that may help to bring some "spring" to everyone's step. On Saturday, March 15 from 7-11 p.m., an American Cancer Society pre Relay For Life Fundraiser is being held at the American Legion. This Saint Patrick's Day get together is a wonderful way to get out of the house, socialize, buy some raffle tickets and listen to some music all to benefit an organization that is so important. Tickets are $20 and can be purchased by contacting Ann Marie Goff at 781-383-2684 or Pat Laugelle at 781-383-1737. This year's Relay For Life is being held on May 17 and May 18. Line up your babysitters, pull out all your green and come on down for a fun night for a great cause.

FAMILY FUN

Looking for something fun to do with the whole family during these arctic cold evenings? Come join us for Family Night at the Osgood School Cafeteria on Friday, March 14 at 7 p.m. We'll have dessert and a well known entertainer, Rick Goldin, give a lively show. Maybe you've seen Rick at the annual WGBH Ice Cream Fun Fest? His performances are lively and interactive and he's sure to entertain the young and the "not-so-young" alike! This fundraising event is only $5 per person, but not to exceed the cost of $25 for the entire family. So bring the whole gang....who can beat that price for dessert and family entertainment? This event is open to the community and all proceeds benefit our children at the Osgood Elementary School. As always, we welcome your support.

QUILT SHOW

TAX RELIEF

The Cohasset Board of Assessors would like to notify property owners that the deadline for filing for fiscal year 2003 real estate tax exemptions is Monday, March 24. Check this week's Mariner for more details! Exemption forms are available at the Assessors' Office in the Town Hall. For additional information, please contact the Assessors' Office at (781) 383-4114.

A TRUE HERO

I wanted to send out all our sympathy to the families and friends who lost a loved one in the tragedy that occurred two weeks ago in Rhode Island. Words cannot express the sadness over such a senseless accident. I want to let the family of Carlton "Buddy" Howorth know how much everyone is thinking of them as they begin to deal with the loss of Buddy. Buddy, only 39 years old and a son, father, uncle and friend, lost his life in this horrible fire and saved the life of his girlfriend by pushing her out. He is a hero and will always be remembered lovingly by family and friends.

TOP DEBATER

Reed P. Smith of Cohasset, a junior at Boston College High School, finished among the top B.C. High debaters, with a high score of 95.33 speaker points out of 120 possible points at the Boston Catholic Forensic League Championship at Shrewsbury High. Reed, with teammate Steven B. O'Reilly of Pembroke were the highest ranked B.C. High team in the tournament. Boston College High School has a long tradition of debating, dating back to just after the school's founding in 1863. B.C. High over the years has had many championship debate teams and this tradition continues to the present. The team currently has 20 members. The B.C. High Debate Team is not just about the competitions, but also teaches the skills of debate, and educates club members about the social topics discussed through the national resolution. The team has membership with the National Catholic ForensicLeague (Boston Catholic Forensic League), and The Massachusetts Forensic League. Keep debating Reed, we would love to hear more as time goes on.

ON STAGE

Cohasset resident Michela Valente, a fifth-grader at Newton Country Day School of the Sacred Heart, portrayed the maiden "Tinkerbel" in the school's recent production "Pirates of Penzance." Super performance Michela, keep up the shining work.

DEAN'S LIST

I heard from Gary Anderson this week and he and his wife , are so proud of their daughter, Elizabeth W. Anderson who has been named to the dean's list at Curry College for the Fall 2002 Term. Elizabeth needed to maintain a GPA of 3.3 to qualify. Elizabeth is majoring in psychology and is a sophomore at Curry. Great work Elizabeth.

GIRL SCOUT WEEK

Some of you may be wondering as you are traveling around town this upcoming week and see beautiful, big green bows what they are for. Many may think that they are for Saint Patrick's Day and yes, some of them may be. The others are put up by the Girl Scouts of Cohasset to let everyone know that they proud to be a Girl Scout and that they live at that house. This coming Sunday, March 9 is Girl Scout Sunday and you may also have the pleasure of seeing these bright and happy faces at your place of worship as they wear their sashes and vests and show their pride. Throughout the week, if you know or see a Girl Scout, make sure to say hello.

That is all for this week. Make sure to have all news and event information to me no later than Mondays at noon.

There wasn't a frown on any of the 200-plus faces at Sunday's open house at the new Paul Pratt Memorial Library, just a lot of wide eyes.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Vote No on override

TO THE EDITOR:

On Thursday, Feb. 27, a group of Cohasset residents interested in promoting responsible taxation fiscal discipline met to discuss the financial dilemma facing our town. Several practical aspects of municipal spending were discussed including the following issues:

1. The likely request for a Proposition 2-1/2 override this year is expected to be $350,000. This will be put in the format of a permanent tax rate increase not only for this year but for every year in the future.
2. Proposed municipal pay raises for this year total $584,685!
3. A simple salary freeze of municipal employees this year would mean no cut in school programs, no school or town lay-offs, and no reduction in town services would be necessary.
4. Proposition 2-1/2 provides for predicted increases in revenues. We should learn to live within this limit.
5. Town and school leadership should be held responsible to manage their budgets without threatening to cut popular programs or they should resign and allow someone else to rise up to this challenge.
6. During these hard economic times many residents working in the private sector have lost their jobs or experienced pay reductions. We do not want to see any town employees loose their jobs or value school programs eliminated at the expense of funding pay raises.

Cohasset residents have been very generous in providing tax dollars to fund significant improvements in our schools, municipal services, and town projects. However, the long history of approving Proposition 2-1/2 overrides has now placed Cohasset amongst the highest taxed towns in Massachusetts. The problem we face now and in the future if we allow this trend to continue, is that the pattern of "ask and you shall receive" has been established and is now expected by our town officials.

There is a point in time, which I believe is now, that the taxpayers need to take a stand, need to take control, and most importantly meet to set limits on the expenditure of their tax dollars.

The only way to send this message to our town officials is to attend the town meeting on March 29, and have your voice heard. To promote fiscal responsibility "Vote No" on the Proposition 2-1/2 override.

Train is still best alternative

TO THE EDITOR:

The MBTA's recent decision to suspend further construction work on the Greenbush restoration is being seized on by its detractors as a sign of that project's inevitable demise. The decision was made not due to past cost overruns resulting from irresponsible spending, but rather with the purpose of avoiding just such an occurrence. It therefore stands as an act of responsibility and foresight which will go to protect the restoration project and assure its hoped-for completion. Meanwhile, the planning and permitting process continues to move ahead.

Time is money, and any delay in the project will almost certainly increase its cost. This has been basic to the strategy of the various opponents over the past 15-plus years as they have sought one roadblock after another to hamper the progress of commuter rail restoration, hoping to drive up its price until the state finally threw up its hands and cancelled it. Their arguments, lawsuits and schemes for "transportation alternatives" have failed to sway the decision-making bodies (e.g. the Army Corps of Engineers, the MBTA, and the past four administrations) that they had a better answer. It is thus ironic that the opponents decry excessive spending when it is partly through their efforts that the project's costs have risen as they have. The present holding pattern also does not result from any merit of these ploys, but from the desire of the project's managers to avoid premature commitments until all its ducks are lined up.

The holding decision does, of course, complicate the plans of the Greenbush communities for projects which would utilize mitigation funds. These communities, Hingham first and foremost, have struck hard bargains for mitigation concessions from the state. My perception is that the MBTA has been generally accepting of these stipulations (though not always, as the issue of quad grade-crossing gates shows), and has likewise accepted their price tag. Having secured these mitigation agreements, the towns cannot turn around and say that the whole thing costs too much.

The most glaring example of a cost overrun comes from Hingham, which appropriated $100,000 at Town Meeting for a lawsuit to cancel the restoration project, then spent over three times that amount without seeking voter approval or accounting for it in any way until it was already done. Or have I missed something here?

But enough. Opponents of rail service restoration view this latest development as what they hope will be the beginning of the end for the Greenbush Line — Sen. Hedlund's "corpse in the coffin". Supporters can look at the 5-year record of success of the other two Old Colony lines (Kingston & Middleborough) and at the provisions of the mitigation agreements now existing, and hope that Secretary Grabauskas will indeed take an objective look at the project and conclude that its merits are as sound today as they ever were, both for the individual communities involved and for the region which they comprise.

Ross D. Hall

Full speed ahead

TO THE EDITOR:

When I became aware of the possible delay of Greenbush restoration, I could only recall the years of road blocks by Hingham for 128 expansion (now 228). They now, by delay, have caused the Greenbush costs to rise more than 200 million.

Government should not make decisions by the number of protest letters by a small well-financed protest group.

The South Shore region desperately needs relief for the commuters to Boston. All administrations from Dukakis to Swift have pushed forward. I am shocked that a savvy businessman (Mitt Romney) would delay and not have the history of needs analysis at his fingertips.

I have been part of the 20 year study, which discussed, tested, and affirmed the present plan. You always have those directly affected by a project and protesters—mitigation is paramount and has been generously made.

The people of the South Shore are not an elite group which has its boat, bus and closeness to Boston for travel. They are hard working ordinary citizens that suffer with the costs of a second car for commuting. They want a train!

The majority does not write letters since they trust government to do the right thing. Don't delay, full speed ahead.

QUESTION OF THE WEEK

Selectman:

Where do you stand on the need for a Prop. 2-1/2 override to help balance the fiscal year 2004 budget?

SELECTMAN/Roger Hill

Proposition 2-1/2 is a mechanism put in place by the state government to increase taxes by 2.5 percent each year on the local level with out asking permission from the residents. We are in a year in which the Town needs to take advantage of the override provision of Prop. 2-1/2. A tax levy increase this year will avoid damaging levels of cutbacks in our schools, fire, police, and public works.

I support this year's proposed operating override, and urge the selectmen to keep it as low as possible, while maintaining vital services. Massachusetts is in an economic downturn, yet we must maintain quality schools and town services at the local level.

In the future all local agencies need to work together towards a common goal, keeping Cohasset affordable for all its residents and to avoid overrides Spending must be closely guarded and every purchase should be a wise one.

There is an underlying problem of over spending in Cohasset. The local government needs to prioritize spending. The economy has a tendency to go in cycles, and when times are good, the spending may not be such a problem, but when it crumbles so does our budget, from misappropriated funds. In good times, all money spent seems like a good idea , but when times are a little tougher there is a lot of finger pointing and we're backed into a corner, with only a few options, such as layoffs or an override. There needs to be more long term planning .

The selectmen need to anticipate possible economic downturns that may face us in the future We need to better plan and think ahead for the bad times. We need to do better to keep Cohasset as affordable as possible.

SELECTMAN/Gabriel Gomez

Between a stumbling economy and state cuts, the next few years could be difficult times for Cohasset. Difficult times require tough choices. It is necessary to offer voters the option of increasing their taxes in order to save town services. The problem with the current budget issue is not that the Board of Selectmen intends to propose an override, but the manner in which the Board is proceeding. Voters may indeed choose higher taxes, but they must have confidence that both the amount of the override and the details of the services being cut have been thoroughly considered and given sufficient public hearing prior to the override vote.

Under these difficult circumstances, the Board's obligation is to present a responsible override, an amount justified by and to the voters. Deciding what amount is likely to pass and then tailoring cuts to this figure is per se inappropriate. Instead, the override amount should be clearly justified to voters. I propose the Board evaluate the current expenditure plan and rank by priority the items that would be cut without an override. The Board's process should include full and open public debate of the proposed expenditures that are considered so essential as to necessitate an override. Public debate will establish which services voters are willing to live without, and which they would rather pay a tax increase to maintain. Only then may the Board establish an override amount that is justified by the services that it recommends be maintained.

Overrides should not be the normal course; they create additional expenditures for residents already bearing a heavy tax load. However, I would support an override recommendation that results from careful analysis and vigorous public debate; one that is linked to specific essential needs and that is no larger than necessary to meet those needs.

SELECTMAN/Michael Sullivan

The town of Cohasset is not in crisis. We are, however, dealing with a challenging financial environment. These challenges came about not through any fiscal mismanagement at the local level, but rather as a result of the Commonwealth's fiscal crisis.

Proposition 2-1/2 mandates that a town's annual operating increase cannot exceed 2.5 percent without an override. Over the last several years, the town has supported the strategy that we need an operational override every three years to maintain services. Within this strategic financial plan, Cohasset would have faced an override in the fiscal year 2005. However, the 10.87 percent reduction in state aid (or $307,827) to Cohasset as proposed in Gov. Romney's budget has forced the town to consider an override this year. Without this override, we will have to significantly change our expectations of town services. Thus, I support the override.

The proposed $350,000 override will add 21 cents to the tax rate. To put this in perspective, a home valued at $560,000 would see a tax bill increase of $118 per year or $2.26 per week. While I would prefer not to recommend raising taxes, I am willing to invest an additional $2.26 per week to maintain that which we have all worked so hard to accomplish.

Over the last seven years, this community has committed itself to responsibly rebuilding Cohasset's infrastructure and services. Our capital projects have been completed on time and, with few exceptions, on budget. We have accomplished all this while increasing our bond rating and maintaining one of the areas lowest tax rates. The leaders in this town have and will continue to scrutinize expenses and provide quality services. I hope you all appreciate our efforts and support our intent.

Next week's question:

If it were up to you, would you pull the plug on Greenbush?

Responses to the Question of the Week should be no more than 300 words and must be received by 5 p.m., Monday. Candidates are asked to be specific and make every word count. Submissions will be cut if they exceed the word limit. (We use the word-count feature on the computer to determine the number of words.) Candidates may reply by e-mail at mford@cnc.com; by fax at 781-741-2931, or by dropping off their responses at the Cohasset Mariner office in the Hingham Journal Building, 73 South St., Hingham Square. Items may also be dropped off at Cohasset News on Brook Street. However they choose to deliver their answers, candidates should adhere to the 5 p.m. Monday deadline.

We will also publish a weekly Candidates' Corner, which will be limited to a few paragraphs (about 150 words), from any candidate who chooses to submit dates of coffees, fundraisers and the like.

The Mariner will not accept letters to the editor from candidates or letters endorsing or attacking particular candidates. The Mariner will publish letters about campaign issues from citizens not seeking election.

If you have questions, or would like to suggest a Question of the Week, call Mary Ford at 781-741-2933 or contact her by e-mail at mford@cnc.com.

Finding fault with France

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

"How many Frenchmen does it take to screw in a light bulb?" asked a friend of mine the other day.

"You mean Poles, don't you?" I replied.

"No, Frenchmen."

"I give up," I said. "How many Frenchmen does it take?"

"Three," my friend chortled. "One to hold the bulb in the socket and two to turn him around."

The last time I heard that one the holder and both turnees were Polish.

The time before that, they were "Newfies," as Canadians are wont to call their fellow countrymen who happen to live in Newfoundland.

And, as far as I known, the Chinese tell Japanese jokes, Australians tell them about New Zealanders and Martians are getting ready to tell them about Earthlings.

Right now it's fashionable to diss the French with the same jokes ever since their president, Jacques Chirac, declined an invitation to join the chorus of hounds that are baying after the scalps of Saddam Hussein and his Iraqis.

I'm not here to defend the French, even though they apparently have needed an outside defender ever since their national hero, Napoleon, fled from the field at Waterloo.

Don't get me wrong now. I'm not here to defend the French, even though they apparently have needed an outside defender ever since their national hero, Napoleon, fled from the field at Waterloo.

Napoleon wasn't really French but a native of Corsica, an island that is as much Italian as it is French.

How can you defend a people who think that Jerry Lewis is just about the funniest thing in American movies, that frogs legs are a delicacy and maybe even put tomatoes in their clam chowder, for all I know?

It seems like relations between the French and the Americans, which started on such a high note as far back as 1781, have been going steadily downhill since the first World War when Col. Charles Stanton of the American Expeditionary Force told the French: "Lafayette we are here!"

It's hard to tell just when those relations hit rock bottom but my guess was that it was the day last month when the French decided they wanted no part of an invasion of Iraq.

Of course, the German, the Russians, the Chinese and several other erstwhile friends came to the same conclusion but it was the French who, for some reason, stood alone in the path of instant retaliation.

Vacations in Paris — once "everybody's hometown" — were cancelled and the French Institute in New York noted a decrease in students at their French-language classes.

A restaurateur (pardon my French) in Beaufort, S. C., renamed his French fries "freedom" fries and the idea spread like wildfire across the country.

Worst than that, folks in West Palm Beach, Fla., took to pouring French wines into the street until cooler heads prevailed, hopefully, before they reached M for Merlot.

The recycled Polish jokes were heard on the talk shows and appeared on the Internet, like, "What do you call a million men with their hands in the air?" "The French army, of course."

The crowning insult came with the discovery that Joan of Arc, the ultimate French heroine, was not really French at all but a native of the Duchy of Bar, which did not become part of France until some 300 years after her death.

Furthermore, her father threatened to drown her if she went into France.

HEALTH NOTES

The challenge of controlling growth

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Last October we looked at several initiatives which would increase the number of housing units in town. Since that time, the number has increased. The current approximate count is shown in the table. There are probably some inaccuracies as this information is far from easy to find.

History tells us that typically in the 1870s and for a hundred years, the way to control growth in a town like Cohasset was to build sewers where you wanted growth, and then pass a law prohibiting unsanitary waste disposal, that is: outlaw privies. People wanting a bathroom typically moved to where these amenities would be cheapest to provide: near the sewer. It was either that, or build a septic system, and if your land didn't perk (pass a so-called percolation test) you were out of luck.

Two factors have served to change this dynamic. The first is that amenities such as water, waste disposal, and sewers have become ever increasingly expensive. The second is that, for a price, it is possible to provide wastewater treatment virtually anywhere. It is still not possible to use the latest innovative technology on new construction. But parcels with homes which have failed systems can now be upgraded to use satisfactory wastewater disposal. Many parcels heretofore thought of as "unperkable" now can be made to accept legal wastewater disposal systems. These factors coupled with mortgage rates that are the lowest in three generations, and house prices higher than they have ever been, have provided an almost irresistible desire for developers to capitalize on those parcels in town which become available regardless of suitability or community sentiment.

The problem for a town like Cohasset is that we are used to having large parcels of land around us which can't or shouldn't be developable — never mind that we have been more successful than most towns in discouraging wholesale development. It's not up to the Board of Health to propose solutions to growth issues. But it is appropriate for the board to point out that two valuable commodities which the town provides: drinking water and wastewater disposal are closely related and have very important health implications. If we, through neglect, threaten our water supply or, as we have in the past, pollute our groundwater through poor wastewater disposal — every citizen will be affected.

Name	Acres	Planned dwellings	Status
Avalon Bay	64	200 units	Pending ZBA decision
Beach Street	24	110	Application rejected by EOCD
Jane Cook Property	30	15	Unknown
Jerusalem Road Estates (Curtis estate)	54	24	Awaiting Sewer Decision
Senior Housing	20	50	Planned
Hayes Estate	41	150	Before Planning Board
Total Units		549

Town regulations relating to development haven't kept pace with the changing dynamic of universally available wastewater disposal and the high price of housing. To their credit, the volunteers manning the various town boards are doing their best to cope with the ever changing economic and demographic realities facing the town, but generally the process of change for regulators and administrators is slow and unwanted projects slip in before new regulations can be implemented.

We have spoken of the Growth and Development Committee before and the good work that group is doing reviewing the bylaws of other towns, selecting for consideration those which seem to fit the needs of Cohasset. Actually, there is a public meeting of this committee tonight at Town Hall to discuss open space and cultural preservation. But as chairman Rick Swanborg says this is a work in progress and the committee will continue its work over several years, eventually resulting in a coherent set of bylaws and regulations reflecting the citizens' desires for the town. Hopefully, as this process evolves regulations and bylaws will come before the town to be enacted which will help the town achieve the goal of preserving its character.

Given the unusual number of current projects facing town regulators, one expedient has been proposed: to call for a moratorium on new construction starts. Other ideas may also have merit. One thing which most boards are now doing is circulating minutes of their meetings and deliberations to the other boards. This is now relatively easy to do, since most minutes are now kept electronically. The board encourages the continuation and expansion of this practice, since it has proven extremely useful in coordinating the town's response to many of these new development initiatives. There is no single answer to the management of progress. In Cohasset, however, we are fortunate to have many citizens who are sufficiently concerned about keeping the town's character to speak out about what they see going on.

Steve Bobo is chairman of the Board of Health.

POLITICAL NOTES

Local legislators talk runway with AG

State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, and Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, met with Attorney General Thomas Reilly recently regarding the expansion of Logan Airport.

Bradley and Hedlund had requested the meeting due to the recent revelations regarding the so-called "Mitre Report". This report indicates the data used by the Secretary of Environmental Affairs during the environmental impact review process was flawed. It indicated that the benefits of adding an additional runway at Logan Airport were exaggerated by "a factor of 10".

"Given this information, we felt that it was critical to speak with Attorney General Reilly to see what position his office was going to take on the matter and I am very thankful that the Attorney General took the time to speak with us" said Bradley. "It is our hope that this issue could be litigated further in the ongoing case to lift the injunction against building an additional runway. We also wanted the Attorney General to undertake a separate legal action to re-open the environmental impact process given the fact that the submissions were based on inaccurate data.".

"It would be in the best interest of the impacted communities to re-open the environmental impact process" said Hedlund. "I am hopeful that Attorney General Reilly will agree to take immediate action"

Reilly indicated in the meeting his office will review the matter. He promised follow-up discussions with the Bradley and Hedlund as well as other members of the Legislature.

Republicans meet

The February Republican Town Committee meeting had a full agenda. Two of the three selectmen candidates appeared to introduce themselves and stay for some questions and answers. A lively discussion centering on the town's fiscal situation ensued with candidates Roger Hill and Gabriel Gomez.

Christopher Allen was elected to fill the vacancy on the committee created by Marjorie Smith moving out of state The next meeting of the Town Committee will be held at the LightKeeper's Cottage on Tuesday, March 25 at 7:30 p.m. All interested parties are invited to attend.

Romney makes his case to reform the state budget

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

MICHAEL P. NORTON

A recap and analysis of the week in state government.

The governor is back on the campaign trail.

After delivering a State of the State speech that served as a rally for the budget he released the following day, Gov. Mitt Romney embarked on a campaign for his ideas.

Romney's budget lays to waste state government as it is currently constituted and rebuilds it from the ground up. Pretty much everything that falls within the $22.9 billion proposal is either restructured, dismantled or streamlined.

In many cases, programs and workers are eliminated to bring state spending in line with expected revenues.

Romney made it clear he intends to aggressively make his case for reform and downsizing state government. He held a press conference to take questions from reporters. He held conference calls with newspaper editors and reporters. He and Lt. Gov. Kerry Healey immediately began making the rounds at radio and television stations.

Just two months into his first job in government, the Republican governor has already proffered a plan that represents the most significant change in the way state government operates in a generation. Democratic legislative leaders will have the final word on which plans pass and which ones get rejected, but Romney has the bully pulpit.

He made it clear that he will attempt to block any tax hikes and fight any bid to cut funding for education or what he calls core government services, an amorphous category that includes things like homeless shelters. Beyond that, Romney said, it's all negotiable. Actually, Romney can be as bold as he wants publicly. But from an operational standpoint, he is soberly aware that he is vastly outnumbered by Democrats and has no choice but to negotiate.

Throughout the week, Romney portrayed himself in a somewhat contradictory manner. At times, he boldly cited his principled beliefs, noting he would be unwilling to bend on a "long list" of issues. Other times, he emphasized his intention to be flexible and work with the Legislature on substantive changes to the vast majority of his ideas. The House and Senate have four months to complete their response. The early read from Democrats on Romney's budget was telling. They said the proposal is a solid start towards closing a projected $3 billion budget gap but restructuring the state bureaucracy won't save anywhere close to the $2 billion that Romney claims. Critics said Romney's spending cuts will hurt more than he believes or is letting on. While Romney budget chief Eric Kriss said the budget is structurally balanced, it depends on hundreds of millions of dollars in one-time revenues. And legislators pointed out that the tax-phobic Romney has gone wild with fee increases to generate new revenues.

Democratic legislative leaders will have the final word on which plans pass and which ones get rejected, but Romney has the bully pulpit.

Romney, anticipating the criticism, said he understands his budget isn't perfect, and urged legislators to join him in improving the budget and proposing their own ideas. He assured legislators that his staff is willing and ready to work with them. Like Gov. William Weld, who in 1991 professed no pride of authorship when he proposed the last radical budget plan, Romney said he too is not wedded to his own proposals and is ready to learn about other plans.

"I recognize they're not going to adopt every suggestion that we've made," Romney said. "But I think a lot of these proposals they'll find to be interesting, stimulating and potentially adoptable. And if there are some other ideas they have we haven't thought of, we learn from them. I have probably the largest most comprehensive legislative team that we've seen in Massachusetts from the executive branch in 10 years."

All in all, considering the breadth of the proposed changes, there was lack of acrimony in the air on Beacon Hill that one might expect. Those with major stakes in the budget predictably balked at the changes. Romney's responded the way a parent would, essentially saying change is difficult but sometimes necessary.

And he reminded legislators that while there may be a majority in the House and Senate that would raise taxes again, he doesn't believe two-thirds of legislators — enough to override his tax veto — would opt for new taxes. "I think there's going to be strong support for holding the line on taxes," he said.

The most promising development of the week for taxpayers was a subtle one. During his public appearances, Romney appeared poised, engaged and comfortable. He looked like he was enjoying himself. When he said he relished the challenge of balancing a budget that is woefully out of whack, he seemed credible. Whether the Legislature will tackle the budget crisis with the same zeal is an open question.

In other news:

• Gov. Mitt Romney said he intends to conduct an independent review of the Big Dig to determine if the state or the federal government is entitled to the recovery of costs. Romney echoed his previous calls for further review after meeting with top officials from Bechtel/Parsons Brinckerhoff for about an hour. Both sides called it a "cordial" exchange of ideas and information. Adrian Zaccaria, chief operating officer of the contracting firm responsible for Big Dig construction, issued a statement saying the firm welcomes a "comprehensive review" so they can get on with "the expeditious completion of this project." The meeting comes in the wake of a three-day Boston Globe series that concluded at least $1.1 billion in construction cost overruns, or two-thirds of the cost growth to date, are tied to Bechtel mistakes. The construction joint venture issued a lengthy rebuttal to the series, saying it was loaded with "half truths." The Globe stands by its coverage. Romney did not provide a timetable for the latest review process, nor would he speculate on the likelihood of the state recovering any money.

• Less than 48 hours after announcing during a televised address that his team has uncovered $2 billion in waste and inefficiencies in state government. Romney did a 360 when a reporter informed him that House Speaker Thomas Finneran had questioned that broad claim. "I don't say that there's $2 billion in waste and inefficiency," Romney said. "I'm not telling you that there's $2 billion in waste and inefficiency that I've found. There may be $2 billion but I haven't found it all." Romney said his restructuring plans and reforms do add up to $2 billion.

• After his State of the State speech, Democrats agreed that Romney is an excellent public speaker. But party leaders took partisan aim. Democratic Party chairman Philip Johnston called the governor's speech "rhetorical nonsense" and called the governor a "right wing ideologue." Romney rejected that label outright.

• Despite its universities, an influx of immigrants and the economic expansion of the 1990s, Massachusetts and the Greater Boston region have lost a significant portion of young workers, according to a new Web site that provides a wealth of data on issues affecting residents of Greater Boston. That's bad news for the economy, the Boston Foundation reports, because cities like San Francisco, Austin, Seattle and Atlanta are attracting workers between the ages of 20 and 35. The findings are included in a new report and Web site:

• Romney resisted an opportunity to tackle one program that critics say is somewhat wasteful. He said police officers deserve to continue receiving pay increases for earning graduate degrees because officers need to be more highly trained in an era of terror threats. Higher education officials tightened program standards this week to ensure its integrity.

• State Treasurer Timothy Cahill announced as part of a $1.13 billion borrowing, the state replaced old bonds with new lower interest bonds, lowering anticipated interest payments by $33 million. The bulk of the savings will be delivered in fiscal 2004 and the maneuver will help the state deal with its budget crunch.

$207 MILLION DEFICIT REDUCTION PACKAGE (S 1949)

Senate 38-0, approved and sent to Gov. Romney a deficit reduction plan designed to help close the state's estimated up to $650 million fiscal 2003 budget deficit. The House okayed the plan on a voice vote without a roll call. A key provision, estimated to raise $61 million, increases fees on many real estate transactions conducted at Registries of Deeds across the state and imposes an additional $5 surcharge on all transactions. The measure also taps reserve funds including $40 million from a capital projects fund; $12 million from a work force training fund; $2.9 million from the Clean Elections Judgment Fund; $6.5 million from a health protection fund; $7.5 million from the Affordable Housing Trust Fund; and $17 million from the Renewable Energy Trust Fund. Other provisions include making some retroactive changes in corporate tax laws including allowing the state to collect taxes on income and dividends from Real Estate Investment Trusts; restoring $2 million of $4 million cut by Gov. Romney for a home visiting program for at-risk newborns; and extending the statute of limitations on lawsuits brought by the federal or state government or their contractors arising out of contracts for the planning, design or construction of the $14 billion Big Dig project. Supporters said the bill would generate $207 million that in conjunction with Gov. Romney's recent $343 million in budget cuts would close a $550 million budget gap. They noted the bill does not cut any programs and argued that it also closes many corporate tax loopholes that cost the state millions in lost tax revenue. No senators voted against the bill but some critics oppose the Registries of Deeds fee hikes and say they are nothing more than disguised tax hikes. Some human service advocates say that the reserve funds are not really extra cash and argue that raiding $6.5 million from a health protection fund and $7.5 million from the Affordable Housing Trust Fund would have a real effect on people. Other critics include business leaders who oppose the corporate tax law changes and have promised to challenge the retroactivity of the tax on income and dividends from Real Estate Investment Trusts. (A "Yea" vote is for the bill).

ALSO UP ON BEACON HILL

GOV. ROMNEY'S BUDGET PROPOSAL - The big news on Beacon Hill was Gov. Romney's submission of a $22.8 billion fiscal 2004 state budget that he said eliminates $2 billion in waste, management and inefficiencies. Romney said his proposal will make the most sweeping changes to state government in years. He noted it would close the estimated $3 billion fiscal 2004 budget gap without raising taxes and pointed out that it only increases spending by one-half of one percent over projected fiscal 2003 spending. Critics immediately pounced on the proposal criticizing a host of provisions including a $232 million local aid cut and cuts in human services, higher education, health care and prescription drug programs for seniors. Romney's proposal is the first of three that will be considered on Beacon Hill. Next up is the House package followed by the Senate version. After each branch approves it own package, a House-Senate conference committee will eventually craft a plan that will be presented to the House and Senate for consideration and sent to the governor.

BACKGROUND CHECKS ON CAMP WORKERS - The Department of Public Health has issued regulations requiring all Bay State summer camps to check the criminal background records of all paid staff and volunteers. The regulations were issued as a result of a bill approved by the legislature and signed into law last November by former Gov. Swift. Prior rules only required a check of workers over age 17 who had unsupervised, direct contact with campers. Under the new policy, camps will check arrest records and sex offenses and cannot hire anyone until the review is complete.

ANTI-TERRORISM FUNDS - The Public Safety Committee held a special hearing on state and federal funding for Massachusetts homeland security. Several police and fire officials told the committee that increased funding is necessary to prevent and/or respond to terrorist attacks. Senate committee chair Jarrett Barrios (D-Cambridge) said that lack of federal funding combined with local aid cuts have compromised the ability of the state and local communities to respond to a terrorist attack. Needham Fire Chief Robert DiPoli told the committee that providing the proper equipment is not sufficient. He noted that if local aid cuts continue to reduce police and fire staffing, there would not be adequate staff to respond to an attack.

POTHOLES - Transportation Secretary Dan Grabauskas announced the establishment of a toll-free telephone number for motorists to report potholes on the approximately 9,500 lane miles of state-owned roadways. Potholes have become a bigger problem this year because of the extremely cold weather and heavy snowfall. Motorists can call (800) 227-0608 or #321 from a cellular phone.

BOND REFINANCING - State Treasurer Tim Cahill announced a bond refinancing that he says would save the state $32.7 million through lower debt service costs. The restructuring will replace old bonds with new bonds at lower rates and the bulk of the savings would come in fiscal 2004 beginning July 1.

Fiscal reality

TO THE EDITOR:

While I understand Mr. Van der Lugt's frustration over the Jan. 25, Cohasset voter turnout (See Feb. 6, letter to the editor, "Disappointed in vote, low turnout"), the small numbers and their majority vote accurately reflect the town's beyond breakeven point sentiment about budget override needs and priorities against the background of a significantly depressed economy.

Greater numbers of Cohasset voters have, in some cases repeatedly, auditioned budget overrides in the presence of a compelling need and opportune financing (i.e., significant State reimbursement). During healthier fiscal times, "Cohasset, which ranks ninth in the state in average bills, has passed overrides for new schools, a new library, capping of the town landfill, and sewer projects. The town also has passed five general budget overrides, which permanently increase the towns tax limit under 2-1/2; since 1981.

Yes, it may be interesting to see how many citizens participate in Cohasset's next override election. For the duration of the fiscal cold wave, I would hope that interest accedes to critical importance when observing how effectively we evaluate our neighbors' individual "R-value" equivalent economic insulation alongside fundamental community needs.

Why we fight Greenbush

TO THE EDITOR:

The news that the MBTA has put Greenbush on a six-month hold is exhilarating to say the least. Even more encouraging are comments from Secretary of Transportation, Daniel Grabauskas, that he plans to take an objective look at the project in light of all the other pressing transportation needs in the Commonwealth. An objective look at Greenbush by a fiscally responsible administration is all we could have asked for, short of outright cancellation of the project.

While many Greenbush opposition groups over the years deserve credit for this turn of events, a great deal of credit of late goes to our elected officials. Sen. Bob Hedlund, and Rep. Garrett Bradley and to Former Secretary of Environmental Affairs and president of Advocates for Transportation Alternatives (AfTA), John Bewick. They stuck by their guns on this issue even as Jersey barriers and chain link fences appeared along the right of way causing resident's spirits to plummet. They waited patiently for the political landscape to change. And when it did, they let the new administration know that Greenbush was a deeply flawed and overly expensive project and one that would become even more so over time.

And yet much remains to be done.

In the words of Sen. Hedlund, "We've put the corpse in the coffin, but we haven't nailed it shut." No sooner had he spoken these words, than the South Shore Chamber of Commerce launched a campaign to get the project, "back on track." And you can rest assured the South Shore Chamber of Commerce will not be the only pro-train constituency working the back halls of Beacon Hill.

So just as AfTA has claimed all along that Greenbush was not a done deal, it has to be recognized that conversely the end of the project is not yet a done deal.

To this end, I encourage South Shore residents who has helped fund AfTA's legal fight against Greenbush to redouble their support. It is due in part to AfTA litigation that we are where we are today and AfTA litigation will continue to pose a serious challenge to the MBTA as they seek the permits they need to resume construction.

While the main goal of the litigation is to win on the merits, it is no small matter that a natural fallout from litigation is "delay" and when John Bewick says the process "could take years" he is sending a message the MBTA does not want to hear.

One of the important costs of AfTA's litigation is the retaining of experts to provide testimony to counter claims by the MBTA. As an example of how important this process is, consider that one of the four reasons the MBTA gave for the six-month delay: The order of the state Department of Environmental Protection that the MBTA must build special crossings to allow spotted turtles and other species to travel across the right of way.

It may seem trivial, but the DEP order sets an enormous precedent involving public works projects and endangered species, and adds another line item to the Greenbush price tag. The DEP order would most likely never have happened had it not been for the expert testimony provided by Dr. Bryan Windmiller, an endangered species expert retained by AfTA.

In addition to Dr. Windmiller, AfTA intends to retain the services of several other experts for upcoming litigation. Among them are Professor Frank Koppleman of Northwestern, one of the country's leading experts in transportation modeling, and Dr. Carl Berkowitz, former head of the Staten Island ferry.

The retaining of expert witnesses is a vital but expensive part of the process and AfTA needs the financial support of all those opposed to Greenbush to help fund it.

This long and hard fought battle is not over. But at long last someone on Beacon Hill is listening, which is all the more reason for the voice of opposition to Greenbush to remain loud and clear.

It is unfortunate that we are embroiled in a process that is resulting in so much waste, but it is also important to remember why we in Hingham oppose Greenbush. We are very fortunate to live in one of the most pristine historic districts in the nation. A restored Greenbush with 24 heavy diesel trains a day running through the heart of the district would create a blight zone through its very center and forever alter it, tunnel or no tunnel. Hingham would never be the same. No public transit system is worth it and if the Romney administration puts an end to Greenbush, for whatever reason and at whatever cost, then we will have done a great service to future generations. There are other public transit alternatives available to us, but there is only one Lincoln National Historic District.

Village spruce up

TO THE EDITOR:

This letter was sent to selectmen Feb. 25

I'd like the residents of Cohasset to visit Scituate Harbor to see what's happening to a once scenic, historic, beautiful, New England area. It's going into obscurity: the beauty gone, the quaintness gone, the small town feeling gone. This could happen to our village, very easily, if we don't watch out.

A few years ago some self styled road/street designer was hired by the Town of Scituate to redesign Front Street. And he did. Now it's a sterile feeling Main Street. It doesn't say to the visitor, "come on down and enjoy the shops - the area - the people. This could happen to our village, very easily, if we don't watch out.

I realize that something should be done to the sidewalks; they're in tough shape. So let's do it but does that mean we have to redesign the Village? No, it means we redo the sidewalks and lower the road so we have curbing.

There is talk regarding "bumpouts" at three spots for cross walks. These are unnecessary and only add to the problems of maintenance and plowing. There are signs available for specifically identifying "crosswalks." You can't miss them; they're very effective.

As far as wires, poles and streetlights are concerned the Town turned down the override for burying the wires and rightly so. First, it's not needed and second the cost is prohibitive. As you all know the figure given to do the project is $800,000 - but - this figure could balloon to more than a million dollars before it's finished because of the unknowns beneath Brook Street, Elm Street, and South Main. Attractive and effective streetlights can be mounted on the light poles. There's no need for special poles to make Cohasset look like something it isn't. We have throughout the Town street lights that do the lighting of the road, very effectively; isn't that what we're after?

For some reason someone a few years ago, felt that Cohasset had to be revitalized - had to be dressed up - had to be modernized - had to be made classy - had to be made to look like what it isn't. Cohasset is Cohasset; a very active, small New England Village, unique in its appearance, a pleasant place to shop.

Look at it any morning from 7 a.m. to the close of a full work day. Look at it on a weekend. Is this what you'd call a village that needs revitalization? No, but it could use a "sprucing" up.

Please express your thoughts and ideas to the Board of Selectmen or the Town Manager, for they are your key to a village you'll be proud of. A plain, simple, interesting, inviting, appealing New England Village that says "come on down - visit our town - visit our historic harbor, museums - shop our shops - have a meal - spend the night in a local inn or bed and bath.

Let's do the best we can to keep Cohasset and its village a pleasant, quaint, New England Town.

CMI to launch spring benefit gala

Mark your calendars for 7:30 p.m. on March 28 for the annual Cohasset Maritime Institute(CMI) fundraiser at Bancroft Hall. Also know as the "The Spring Launch Fundraiser", the party last year brought together more than 100 partygoers, who raised more than $5000.

This year brings special significance as it represents the tenth year the rowing club has made its strong presence felt in Cohasset Harbor. Founded by a small group of rowing and maritime education enthusiasts, CMI now boasts a vibrant program and a growing membership. (For those unfamiliar with CMI, it sponsors rowing and maritime programs for middle-high school students and adults.)

When asked how CMI will deploy proceeds from the upcoming "Spring Launch," founder Jack Buckley said, "Annual membership fees cover most of the operating expenses like staffing. But we need to build up our reserves for large ticket capital items like boat replacements and building upkeep."

"We have tremendous momentum to our membership. We want to deliver a top notch experience for our students and adult rowers," he said.

To further energize the silent auction, CMI has asked interested individuals and businesses to donate items or services such as gift certificates, gourmet baskets, home-cooked meals, artwork, services for pets, boat rides, vacation home stays and any other appealing ideas of a whimsical or practical nature. Snow Row in Hull is Saturday

The Hull Lifesaving Museum is hosting its signature rowing race, The Snow Row, at noon on Saturday March 8 at the Windmill Point Boathouse, Hull. Huge crowds gather on the beach beside the museum's Windmill Point Boathouse to share in the wild, LeMans-style start, unpredictable weather, and one-of-a-kind gathering of boats and athletes. Entirely within view of the Boathouse, the event is as much of a thrill for spectators as for participants.

After watching the excitement of the Snow Row's one-of-a-kind start, come inside the Boathouse to warm up with a cup of hot coffee or cocoa. A mile from the Boathouse, the museum will be open throughout the day with free admission. In addition to exhibits about shipwrecks, lifesaving, lighthouses, and local heroes, our brand new exhibit Taken by Storm: the Blizzard of '78, is also on display. Third time a charm?

Staszko seeks to expand plaza

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Expanding Cohasset Plaza will once again be on the warrant at Town Meeting this year.

It's the fourth time in five years that owner Donald Staszko has sought the expansion – but the third time it will go before Town Meeting.

Last year, Staszko withdrew his article at the last minute due to lack of support, mostly from the Planning Board. This year, Staszko is reverting to the approach he took at Town Meeting two years ago, when his article missed the necessary two-thirds approval by only four votes.

Staszko's goal is to expand the Highway Business district back 200 feet behind Stop & Shop to create more space for development. He told Selectmen last week the plan would mean $100,000 per year in additional property taxes for the town.

Under the current bylaw, a use permitted in one zoning district may be extended by up to 200 feet into another district by special permit if both portions of the property were under common ownership before zoning district lines were adopted.

Staszko does own the abutting property, but because Cohasset Plaza lies in the watershed protection district, it's ineligible for a special permit.

Last year, Staszko initially asked for the right go before the Zoning Board of Appeals for the special permit despite his watershed location. The Planning Board rejected the plan, however, because of the precedent it would have set.

This year, Staszko is asking for the zoning map to be redrawn to accommodate for the expansion — the same route he took in 1999 and 2001.

Planning Board members have been opposed to the plan in the past, saying that zoning districts should be permanent, not changeable by request.

Selectmen last week postponed their decision whether to recommend the article, opting to wait for an opinion from the Water Commission. Water Commissioner John McNabb told Selectmen he had not had time to review the plans.

Brothers Terry and Matt advance to New England wrestling championships

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

When an athlete from a small school like Cohasset High places at Sectionals, it's always impressive. When one places at the Division State Championships, it's rare. What CHS senior Terry Baroudi did last weekend was remarkable.

In one of the toughest weight classes in ht state, 135 pounds, Baroudi took second at All-States in a 12 man field which featured the top four finishers from Divisions I, II and III. Baroudi became the only other All-State Finalist from Cohasset besides Kevin Duffy (who took second, also at 135 pounds, in 1997) since the tournament came into existence a decade ago.

Cohasset sent four athletes to All-States, and all wrestled extremely well. Sophomore Matt Baroudi (215 pounds), like his senior brother, earned a spot at New England's with a sixth place finish. Junior Phil Strazzulla, who jumped up two weight classes at the start of the postseason to 140, and sophomore Jon Littauer, an up-and-comer at 103, both put in solid performances in the two day tourney.

"The kids wrestled awesome," smiled longtime coach Torin Sweeney. "Just to get the chance to wrestle at All-States, you have to wrestle phenomenally."

Terry Baroudi took down the Div. State Champion Wes Parker to open his tournament. Merely an hour later, he beat the Div. I State Champ Dave Lapschelle of West Springfield to advance to the finals. Although he lost to the Div. 2 runner-up, Matt Kahlil of

Bixby shines at States

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

There's nothing sweeter in high school sports than when a senior closes out a brilliant career on a high note. CHS gymnastics phenom Meredith Bixby did exactly that last weekend, finishing her six year tenure as a varsity competitor with a great showing at the State Individuals competition.

"She had a great meet," lauded Cara Connerty, the head coach of the Cohasset/Norwell combined gymnastics team, a position she has held for four years. "It was a great way for her to end her career."

After qualifying for States in only the vault as a junior, Bixby came back as a senior to compete in three events, the vault, the floor and bars.

Her top performance of the day was the vault, earning a score of 8.7 with her back tsuk vault, good enough for fifth place in the state. Bixby tied several other gymnasts for 10th for her floor routine, earning a tremendous 9.0. The only event in which Bixby did not place was the uneven bars, where she still had an impressive showing, with a score of 8.25.

At the State Individuals, Bixby was facing the best of the best. It was not like most sports, where the small schools face the small schools, and the big ones take on the big ones. This meet, held at Beverley High School, featured the top gymnasts from all three Sectionals, regardless of their division.

"It was a very competitive year," affirmed Connerty. "There were a lot of excellent, excellent gymnasts."

Senior Emily Rinaldo, of Beverley, impressed her home crowd with a second place fin-

CHS hockey team falls in quarters to Blue Hills

By Joel Racicot
JRACICOT@CNC.COM

After graduating 10 seniors and bringing in a new coaching regime, it seems fair to say that few expected the Cohasset High hockey team to accomplish what it did this season.

This past Tuesday night, the Cinderella story ended when the South Shore League champion Skippers ended their season with a tough luck loss in the sectional quarterfinals to perennial state power Blue Hills, 4-2.

"That first period was really tough for us. Inexperience played into us falling behind so early, and you can't forget that (goalie Stefan) Parnell is only a freshman. He just needed to settle down and get over the nerves."
Cohasset hockey coach John Blake

The third seeded Warriors came out of the gates firing on all cylinders, and a young and inexperienced Cohasset team found themselves in a big 3-0 hole heading into the first break.

"That first period was really tough for us," noted first year Cohasset coach John Blake. "Inexperience played into us falling behind so early, and you can't forget that (goalie Stefan) Parnell is only a freshman. He just needed to settle down and get over the nerves."

Blue Hills scored just 25 seconds into the game when the Warriors dumped the puck in behind the Cohasset net, and the puck was dug out of the corner and centered beautifully to a streaking Warrior forward, who flicked a wrist shot over Parnell's left shoulder.

Blue Hills continued to keep the pressure on, and the puck in their zone during the first period. On the Warriors second goal, Steve Richards picked up the puck at the blue line and skated ahead of a Cohasset defensemen leading to a two-on-none and another goal, this one 6:07 into the game.

The goal that really blew the Skippers sails into a storm during the period came 1:38

The battling Baroudis tackle challenge they've been training their whole lives for

Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Perhaps it really isn't all that surprising that both of the Baroudi brothers advanced to the New England wrestling championships this Saturday at Lowell High School.

Genetics no doubt played a part, but this is a challenge senior Terry and sophomore Matt have been readying for for most of their lives, even though neither of them likely had any idea what the New England Wrestling Championships even were until a few years ago.

Matt and Terry, you see, were quite the little hellions growing up, and they've been using one another as wrestling dummies for as far back as either can remember, each honing their grappling skills along the way, though this was hardly the intent in most of their brouhahas.

"Oh, they've always been real...energetic," said mom Trina Baroudi with a laugh. "Even in the last few years, I remember a lot of times coming home or walking into the room and finding them going at each other tooth and nail."

Longtime Cohasset High wrestling Torin Sweeney was first introduced to the Baroudi boys when he ran a grade school sports summer camp at the Deer Hill School.

Trina can't help but break into laughter thinking back to the facial expressions and body language Sweeney used to exhibit when he saw her arriving with young Terry and Matt.

"Yeah, they were a handful," confirmed Sweeney.

"But Torin was great with them," Trina said. "He still is. I can't thank him enough for what he's done with Terry and Matt."

Torin has likewise been impressed with the progress of both boys, Terry in particular, both on and off the mat.

"Terry has made huge strides maturing as an athlete, a person and student," said coach Sweeney of the Honor Roll Student. "He was voted a student of the month last month, and that was well earned. He's come a long way."

Matt is the "little brother" in age designation only. He wrestled in the 215-pound division

Central Catholic, in the finals, he earned a very solid draw for the New England's, which will be held this Friday and Saturday at Lowell High School.

Matt Baroudi finished the two-day meet at 2-3, defeating strong opponents from Wilmington and from Billerica, as he will go to the New England competition as the sixth seed from Massachusetts.

"To place as a sophomore is phenomenal," said Sweeney. "He's got a shot to do OK at New England's."

Strazzulla, a junior captain, opened his two day set with a tough loss to Franklin's Dan McNalley, who was the Div. 2 runner-up. In the consolation bracket, he was eliminated in a heart-breaking 5-4 decision to a Div. 3 runner up Brian Dietzal, of Foxboro. Sweeney noted that the final buzzer sounded as Strazzulla was making a take-down move that could have swung the match in his favor.

Littauer pinned the Div. I runner-up to start things off for himself.

However, he could not maintain a 4-2 lead in the third period of his quarterfinal match-up, losing to the eventual All-State champ, 5-4. Littauer lost his final match-up after a very strong showing, in which he held a lead of 4-0 heading into the third period.

this winter season, while "big brother" Terry wrestled at 135. Matt has outweighed Terry for about as far back as their mother can recall, so most of those knock down-drag outs have always been pretty evenly matched.

"Yeah, we were at each other's throats a lot of the time," said "big brother" Terry. "It's better now, though. Wrestling has given us an excuse to fight without killing each other."

Wrestling has clearly helped mend a lot of fences between the brothers Baroudi. Matt and Terry spent many hours in the offseason throwing one another around on a mat their parents put in the basement for them in the hopes they'd burn off their energy in a productive manner. Terry got the feel for what it's like to wrestle a bigger, stronger opponent, while Matt picked up a few pointers for staying with a quicker, more technically proficient grappler.

"I think it helped both of us," said Terry. "I think Matt stole a few of my move, though."

Not that Terry begrudges his "little brother" the use of a few moves. In point of fact, Terry is extremely proud of the progress Matt has made this season.

"I think it's incredible what he's done for a sophomore," said Terry. "When I was a sophomore, I went two (losses) and out at States. It was a learning experience. But here's Matt taking third at States and then sixth at All-States. It's tough to believe how much he's improved this year."

Matt made it to States last year as an alternate after finishing seventh at 189 pounds at Sectionals. He went two and out at States, but the wrestling bug that had his big brother in a hammer lock by this point had begun to take firm hold of him as well.

Terry's improvement over the last year has also been noteworthy, as has the work that made it possible. After finishing fifth at States last year wrestling in the 135-pound division, missing by one spot of qualifying for All-States, the then junior committed himself totally to improvement. He gave up on high school baseball and football in order to concentrate fully on his winter sports obsession.

He finished this season with a 28-2 record, leading the Skippers to their second consecutive league title, and then took first place at 135 pounds at the South Sectionals, Cohasset finishing second to only host Foxboro in the 21 team field.

Despite being in the throws of a nasty flu bug, Terry finished third at States the following weekend. Matt followed suit and both advanced to All-States this past weekend at Salem High School, along with teammates Jonathan Littauer, a sophomore, and Phil Strazzulla, a junior.

Now, only the Baroudis are left to represent Cohasset High at the New England Wrestling Championships this Saturday at Lowell High School, as Terry placed second at 135 and Matt grabbed the sixth and final qualifying spot at 215.

Terry swept through Weston's Peter Orth, two-time defending state champ Wes Parker (3-1) of Natick and Div. 2 state champ Dave Lachapelle of West Springfield, to advance to the All-State championship match with Catholic Central's Matt Kalil.

The Skipper grappler hung tough with the favored Kalil, keeping him scoreless through the first two periods. Unfortunately, Terry was likewise unable to score. Kalil finally broke the ice in the final frame getting Terry onto his back for a 3-point takedown and then repeated this move late in the match as Terry's desperate attempt at a takedown backfired. Kalil won going away, 7-0.

Matt won two of his five matches, but this was good enough to get him onto the next level and some experience which should prove valuable down the road.

"I don't know how well I'm going to do at New England's, but I'm really looking forward to next year," said Matt, sounding more and more like his big brother.

Next year, of course, Matt will be a solo Baroudi act. If things go well, however, both brothers will still be wrestling.

Terry has been accepted to Johnson & Wales University, and has already had a couple of conversations with the school's wrestling coach. His first choice, though, would be Roger Williams University, a bigger school with a more prominent wrestling program. That school's coach has also been in contact, and he made a recruiting trip to Salem High this weekend to check out Terry for himself.

"I think I had a pretty good day," said Terry, who is leaning toward majoring in business. "Hopefully, he liked what he saw."

Assuming the RWU coach did indeed like what he saw, Terry owes a debt of gratitude to his...energetic "little brother."

ish in the all-around competition, behind only Sarrie Rubin of Brookline. Rinaldo was also named Senior Gymnast of the Year later in the meet. Kerry Ann Hart, who led Hanover to the South Shore League title during the regular season, placed tenth in the all-around.

The Coh-Nor team will greatly miss Bixby's presence on the squad, both as a competitor and as a leader. The captain set a very high standard for the talented underclass members of the squad, including Cohasset's Lindsay Durkin and Norwell's Jen Guiney.

"Her skill level has improved every year," observed Connerty. "It is important in gymnastics to be committed to it year round. She is a good example for some of the younger kids to follow."

Icemen can't scale this Hill

before the break when, following a face off in the neutral zone, the puck was dumped down towards the Cohasset net and bounced over the goalie's stick and into the goal.

"The puck just wasn't bouncing our way," said Blake. "We never gave up after that period and in the locker room I just told the guys that there was a lot of hockey to be played."

Blake was right.

After the heartbreaking first period, the Skippers out-skated Blue Hills to almost every loose puck in the second period, and finally struck gold. Finding themselves shorthanded after a boarding penalty, Cohasset senior captain Tom Anderson cleared the puck into the Blue Hills zone, and, when Blue Hills goalie Sean Ciafrei played the puck, it slipped between his pads into the net.

"After we scored that goal it gave us some momentum," noted Blake. "We were patient in the second period and it paid off. We knew we just needed to keep chipping away."

After an extremely physical second period Blue Hills seemed to wear down Cohasset in the final frame. Following a penalty, and some sloppy defense, the Skippers bounced back with a three-on-three charge, led by John Durkin, Ted Straughn and Michael Rasmussen.

Durkin led the rush and fed down low to Straughn, who then fired a shot off of Ciafrei. Rasmussen followed the play and flipped in the rebound to put Cohasset within a goal at 7:26 into the third period.

The Skippers would continue to battle to the finish, but with just under one minute to play Blue Hills scored after some good passing on a chip-in right in front of Parnell.

"Our goal was to keep this a one goal game," said Blake. "We wanted to stay in striking distance and we did. They were a little bit bigger and faster than us and we just didn't get the bounces we needed to pull it out."

As for the future of this Cohasset program things are looking good.

"We had to skate four or five freshman and that is tough to overcome, but things are looking good for next year," said Blake.

Cohasset will lose four seniors off this years team including Durkin, Matt Davis, Mike Colorio, and Tom Anderson. Blake gives credit to these seniors for the run in the tournament and never giving up early against Blue Hills.

"Their was no quit from our seniors tonight, especially from Tommy Anderson," noted Blake.

Anderson helped lead the second period charge and fired up his teammates after the tough first period.

"Tommy is one of the best leaders I've been around in seven years of hockey coaching."

HOCKEY NOTES

This is a sight we'll miss: South Shore League scoring champ John Durkin raising his arm after yet another goal.

Cohasset 5, Diman 2

The tourney opening win on Saturday over Diman was no where as close as the final score of 5-2 might indicate, despite the fact the Skippers barely clung to a 3-2 lead entering the third period.

A more accurate indication of those first two periods could be seen in the shots on goal statline. The Skippers out-shot the Tigers 23-9 for that stretch, and continued to pour it on in the third.

Senior captain Matt Davis gsave the Skipeprs their first two-goal cushion of the game with 8:40 to playwhen he took a nifty drop pass from hard charging linemate John Durkin 15-feet out in the slot and roofed it just inside the glove-side crossbar past the helpless Diman netminder.

Freshman Matt O'Connell iced the game less than three minutes later when some nice forechecking by he and linemates Ted Straughn and Mike Rasmussen resulted in a steal in Diman's end and a quick shot from the right circle by O'Connell that beat the Diman goalie high and far.

Rasmussen, a junior, gave the Skippers a 1-0 lead 1:51 into the game, set up by a nice rush and pretty drop pass by Straughn at the top of the right circle.

South Shore League scoring champ Durkin scored the other two Cohasset goals, both of which broke ties, with Davis assisted on both of these tallies.

All-Stars

The Skippers, who won their second straight South Shore League title this season, placed five players on the South Shore League all-star team, including all three senior captains: forwards Matt Davis and John Durkin and defenseman Tom Anderson.

Also named to the team were juniors Mike Rasmussen, a forward, and Mike Devine, a defenseman.

Freshman goalie Stephan Parnell was nominated, but he picked a bad year to break-in in terms of postseason kudos. Returning senior all-stars Ken O'Sullivan, of Abington, and Mark Saville, of Hull, were named, as was Norwell junior netminder Tom Sullivan, who led the league with a 1.8 goals against average.

Stats Central

John Durkin, the SSL scoring champ, finished the season with a team best 42 points in 22 games (22 goals, 20 assists), postseason included.

Matt Davis finished up with 34 points (15 goals, 19 assists). He was followed by Mike Rasmussen with 26 (11-15) and sophomore Ted Straughn with 18 (7-11). Three players finished with 17 points: Mike Devine (10-7), Tom Anderson (7-10) and freshman forward Matt O'Connell (7-10).

MAXLAX REPORT

U10 Playoff and Championships

Normally we would reserve this spot for a recap of the Championship game (which we will get to below), but I wanted to make mention of an outstanding example of good sportsmanship that I think we can all appreciate and should readily applaud.

After winning their first U10 playoff game, the Cannons were pitted against the first place Mavericks to see who would go onto the Championship round. However, when the Mavericks got ready to play, they realized they were a man short and, with heads low, they conceded the game as a forfeit as per the rules of the program. Cannons head coach Mike Dick would have no part of this, though. In an incredible gesture of sportsmanship, he suggested and then helped recruit, getting additional players from the previous games to "fill out" the Mavericks roster. The extra kids the Mav's got ended up playing a pivotal role in the Mavericks eventual win, but the Spirit of the Game was boosted a few notches by this coach's unselfish desire to "do the right thing" even if it meant putting his own squad at a potential disadvantage. I hope that we all take this approach when we have a chance like this and that we keep this sterling example of what's best about our game forefront in our minds. For the record, the Mav's beat the Cannons in a hard fought game that provided plenty of excitement and a great finish to this final session of MaxLax.

Now, as for the Championship:

Laser 6, Mavericks 4

The game started like most Championships with a restless air of anticipation and with both teams chomping at the bit to take the field. However, we saw something a little unusual for both of these scoring powerhouses - almost 5 minutes of action with no blood drawn. Talk about back and forth action and defensive execution - each team seemed to be one-upping the other as the months of indoor play were clearly coming to the forefront.

The goaltenders were the true stars in this first period as Ty Martina (Lasers) and Teddy Costello (Mav's) repelled shot after shot from almost every angle and repeatedly making saves off of the shot and then the rebound.

The Lasers Stephen Thomas used a one-timer and a top side screen to get the first tally off of an assist by Tyler Virtue. The Lasers kept this momentum going with two more goals by Mike Russell who broke up a Mav's clear and took it to the cage on his own, and then Zach Robertshaw who made a nice underneath move to find glory on the backside. Once again, the Lasers Martina dug in, and in what seemed like eternity, he made 7 saves in a row that left the Mav's shaking their heads disbelief at his prowess.

The Mav's Kevin Plant finally found a crack in the armor to get them on the scoreboard during a man-up situation.

However, this was quickly answered by Russell for his 2nd of the game with a shot from the restraining line and then the first half ended on a tally from the Lasers William. This gave the Lasers a commanding 5-1 lead going into the locker room.

As in the playoff game against the Cannons, the Mavericks needed to gather their forces and make a comeback to get the game back within reach and that's exactly what they did. In the first few minutes they came out on fire and after repeatedly banging away at Martina, they finally notched another one on a rebound recovery that Plant found in front of the crease and put in for good. Cabot Noyce also lit the flame after he got a loose ball and made several quick fakes before he got one to go in off of the top pipe. With time becoming a factor and the momentum clearly in favor of the Mavericks, the Lasers relied on their team defense to stymie multiple scoring threats by the Mav's. The "don't stop until you succeed" mantra paid off however as Plant completed his hat trick for the day on aspectacular end-to-end rush that was capped off by a curving bounce shot that even Martina couldn't get a handle on. Now the game had gotten interesting as the Lasers lead was just one at 5-4.

Knowing that they had to turn up the pressure and take back control of the game, the defense of the Lasers kicked back in with aggressive play that was punctuated by an unbelievable wrap check by Ryan Weber that stopped a sure goal dead in it's tracks.

This led to a quick change of possession which found Robertshaw in full stride heading towards the goal and ala Bobby Orr, he stuck it in the back of the net as he flew through the air for what ended up being the final goal of the game. Though the Mav's had several near misses in the home stretch, they couldn't muster the charge they needed to overcome the last minute ball control and sensational defense of the Lasers that clinched them the victory and the Championship.

Congratulations to the champion Marshfield U10 Lasers!

OBITUARIES

Elizabeth J. Abell

Elizabeth J. Abell, 86, a former resident of Cohasset, died Feb. 24, 2003 at the Village at Waterman Lake in Greenville, R.I.

Born in New Brunswick, N.J., she was the daughter of the late Albert R. Johnson and Ethel H. Johnson.

She was a 1934 graduate of New Brunswick High School in New Jersey and graduated from The New Jersey College for Women (Douglass College) in 1938 with a B.S. in Home Economics.

After graduation, she served as a hostess for Wood Lawn at Douglass College for two years, spent two years teaching home economics at Highland Park High School in New Jersey, served as a dietitian at Princeton Hospital, and worked as a supervisor of dormitories for Douglass College, a division of Rutgers University for 26 years.

She was an active member of the Reformed Church of Highland Park, N.J. where she served on numerous committees, sang in the choir and was a deaconess for a number of years. She was active in the Douglass College Alumni Association and helped co-chair her 50th Class Reunion.

Upon retirement, Mrs. Abell moved to Cohasset where she became active in the Second Congregational Church of Cohasset. She has resided at the Village at Waterman Lake in Rhode Island since 1996.

She leaves her daughter, Jane Bishop of Cohasset; her two sons, David Abell of Seekonk and Carl Abell of East Haddam, Conn.; and her five grandchildren.

A memorial service for family and close friends is planned for later this spring in New Jersey.

Funeral arrangements were made by J.H. Williams & Co. in East Providence, R.I.

Arthur J. Corrigan, Jr.

Arthur J. Corrigan, Jr., age 75, a retired U.S. Marine Corp Gunnery Sergeant, died Feb. 9, 2003 in Roseville, Calif.

Born in Dorchester, he was a longtime resident of North Highlands after his retirement in 1968 after 22 years of proud service in the Marines. He retired again in 1990 after 22 dedicated years of service with the State of California Department of Transportation Bridge Department.

He will be sorely missed by all with whom he had forged strong and lasting memories and relationships.

Some of his Marine Corps assignments included tours of duty at the Pentagon, Camp Lejeune, El Toro, Korea and Okinawa.

While at the Bridge Department in California, he was well known as someone with a great sense of humor due to his witticisms. He was the kind of guy who was always willing to lend a helping hand by offering his many mechanical and electrical skills to those who needed them.

He was a war history aficionado and played a competitive game of chess. He played piano and spoke Japanese. Prior to his death, he was teaching himself Russian and Tagalog.

He was predeceased by his beloved wife of 49 years, the late Doris Catherine Corrigan; and leaves his loving children, Donna M. Pratt and her husband, John, Virginia A. Patterson and her husband, Steve, Victoria E. Copeland and her husband, John; his devoted stepmother, Helena Corrigan; his beloved grandchildren, Kevin and Lauren Patterson; and his cherished sister-in-law, Margaret M. Stoughton and husband, Ira of Cohasset.

He was interred in San Joaquin Valley National Cemetery in Gustine, Calif.

The family asks that in remembrance of Art, friends and loved ones do something patriotic for the United States.

Renaissance redux

Florence and Beyond exhibit celebrates art's great past and present

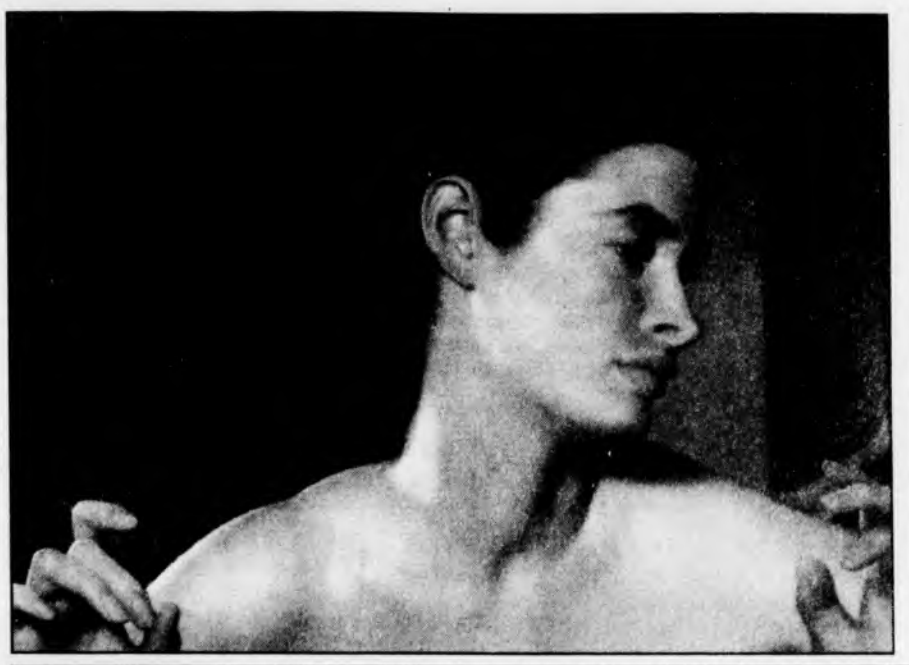
By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

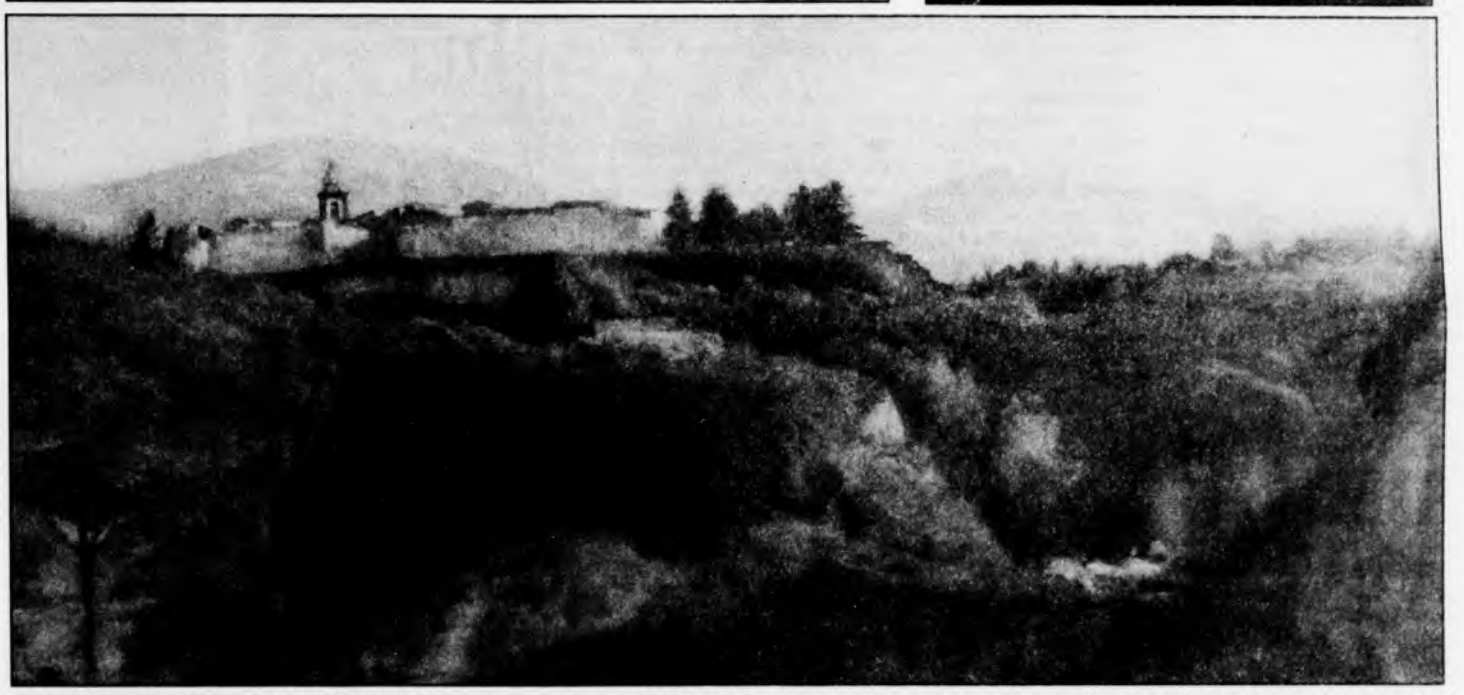
The ancient city of Florence in the Italian province of Tuscany, has long been considered the birthplace of the Renaissance, the revival of European arts and culture transpiring during the 14th to 17th centuries.

This came to be defined as the classic artistic era in European history, including painting, sculpture, music, architecture, literature and more. The Italian origins in the era's visual arts would produce such perennially household-name masters as Michelangelo, Da Vinci and Rapheal as well as the lesser known but comparably influential likes of Masaccio and others.

"The Florentine school is the oldest continuing tradition in Western art history. All of the artists in this show are interested in maintaining their connection with the original 15th and 16th century artists of the early and high Renaissance. These works are their unique way of perpetuating the Renaissance."

Florence and Beyond exhibit curator David Nolta





The Florentine-influenced works of Charles H. Cecil, Daniel Graves, Benjamin Long, D. Jeffrey Mims, Frank Strazzulla and Kamille Corry are on display through April 13 at the South Shore Art Center.

"Florence and Beyond," the major winter-spring exhibit at Cohasset's South Shore Art Center, proves that such a grand tradition in painting/drawing/art-vision does not have to be strictly consigned to its illustrious past. The show spotlights the multimedia works of six contemporary American artists who have all studied and/or taught at the famed Florentine school and impressively interpret its myriad styles and techniques in a modern idiom.

"Florence and Beyond" is on view at the SSAC through April 13.

The works on view range in media from oil paintings to pencil and ink sketches and in format from landscapes and still lifes to figures and portraits. The scope of subject matter could not be more faithful to the Florentine tradition, highlighting the pure features of human forms, lines and cracks of aged faces, lush rural hillsides and quaint villages with much history in their high walls and narrow passageways.

"The Florentine school is the oldest continuing tradition in Western art history," said exhibit curator David Nolta, a Renaissance art scholar and professor at Massachusetts College of Art. "All of the artists in this show are interested in maintaining their connection with the original 15th and 16th century artists of the early and high Renaissance. These works are their unique way of perpetuating the Renaissance."

The sextet of featured artists in the exhibit includes one local in Quincy native Frank Strazzulla, who now lives in Newburyport but maintains a studio in Scituate. Strazzulla, 45, captures inspired rural moments in his various landscape pieces with titles such as "Cypress Trees," "Cloudy Day — Arno River" and "Morning in San Miniato," all of them created in the original Renaissance techniques of hand-mixed pigments and self-prepared surfaces.

The scope of subject matter could not be more faithful to the Florentine tradition, highlighting the pure features of human forms, lines and cracks of aged faces, lush rural hillsides and quaint villages with much history in their high walls and narrow passageways.

"I like to start each work on-location," said Strazzulla. "Some of them are finished in the studio and some later at the location. I'm mainly interested in atmosphere, subtlety, color and value shifts to convey a certain feeling in my work."

Strazzulla studied in the same Florence studios as two other exhibit contributors, Charles H. Cecil and Dan Graves, both of whom now reside in Florence. The remaining participants include Ben Long, of North Carolina, whom the local artist learned directly from, and Jeffrey Mims, of North Carolina, and Kamille Corry, of Utah, both of them classmates of Strazzulla in Florence.

All of the artists' work showcase certain individual specialties, be them landscapes, still life, figures or portraits, but all the contributors demonstrate the versatility to move easily between formats. Each one also includes an eloquent self-portrait in the exhibit.

"Florence and Beyond" has highlighted its SSAC run with a number of festive exhibition programs open to the public, including a Tuscan Wine Tasting Gala and a Reception Tour/Lecture during the show's opening weekend. Still to come is A Day in the Renaissance: Classical Creativity on Sunday (March 9), 1-4 p.m. This is a family day at the Art Center that will offer parents and children a hands-on introduction to art, music and inventions of the Renaissance period.

Potato frittata simplified

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

A frittata is nothing more than a big, filled omelet. The omelet is not folded – it is cooked flat, the eggs and ingredients melded together, and then it is usually served in wedges. So what's the problem? Well, the eggs are usually tough and dry, the potatoes are soggy and take a long time to cook, and many recipes suggest slipping the frittata in and out of the pan, a process that is prone to disaster. I wanted a quick and easy potato frittata with crisp potatoes, just-cooked eggs, and plenty of flavor.

I started testing with five different recipes from the likes of Carol Field, Penelope Casas, and Marcella Hazan and decided that the cooking method for the potatoes was key. Instead of using slices, I started with one and a half cups of small dice and then fried them in a 9-inch non-stick skillet. This took just 10 minutes and only 1 cup of peanut oil. (Other oils either added no flavor or produced less than crispy potatoes.) As for the potatoes, I preferred Yukon Gold or Russets, both of which have good flavor and a nice light texture.

For the eggs, six was the right amount but I did not like the addition of milk of cream. (Separating one or two of the eggs and beating the whites made a fluffier, but not better, frittata.) Once the potatoes were cooked, removed from the pan along with the oil, I found that a tablespoon of butter to cook the eggs added flavor and also tenderness. The lightly whisked eggs are combined with the cooked potatoes and returned to the pan. Now the question was, what was the best method for cooking the eggs?

The problem with a frittata is that the bottom cooks before the top is ready, leading to overcooked eggs. Part of the solution is to pull in the edges of the frittata, tilting the pan so some of the uncooked egg on top runs down onto the hot pan. (This is the same method used to cook a French omelet.) However, this still leaves one with eggs that are undercooked on the top. Many cooks use a broiler to finish this dish (a good solution if you have a good broiler), flip the dish onto a dinner plate and then slide it back into the pan (tricky, at best), or simply place the skillet in a hot oven to finish. This last method is easiest and least prone to error. (Four minutes in a 450-degree oven did the trick.)

Other additions include chopped chives or parsley, sautéed onion, and roasted asparagus. One can also add grated Parmesan cheese, a great addition with the asparagus frittata. Note that salt and pepper are key ingredients and ought not to be reduced or overlooked.

QUICK AND CRISPY POTATO FRITTATA

If one uses a smaller dice, say 1/4-inch, the potatoes will cook in a just a few minutes.

1 cup peanut oil

1 1/2 cups Yukon Gold or Russet potatoes washed and cut into 1/4- inch dice about 2 medium

6 large eggs

3/4 teaspoon salt

Freshly ground black pepper

2 tablespoons finely chopped chives or flat leaf Italian Parsley

1 tablespoon unsalted butter

1. Preheat the oven to 450 degrees and adjust a rack to the center position. Heat the peanut oil in a heavy-duty 9-inch non-stick skillet over medium-high heat. When hot (375 degrees) add the potatoes and cook, stirring occasionally, until they are dark golden brown, a few minutes. Drain the potatoes in a mesh colander and then dump onto paper towels. Sprinkle with 1/4 teaspoon salt. Wipe out the skillet. Lower the heat to medium.

2. Meanwhile whisk the eggs in a medium bowl until foamy, about 2 minutes. Add 1/2 teaspoon of the salt, pepper, and chives or parsley and stir to combine. Place the butter in the skillet. Once it has stopped foaming add the potatoes and then the egg mixture. Stir gently. As the eggs begin to set, push and lift the edges of the frittata to allow the loose egg to run underneath, tilting the skillet if necessary. Continue until the frittata is no longer runny but the surface is still wet, about 2 minutes.

3. Place the skillet in the hot oven and cook until the surface is dry and set, but not browned, about 3 to 4 minutes. Slide onto a plate and serve. Serves six as a side dish.

Onion Variation

Before browning the potatoes, sauté one cup of diced onion in one tablespoon peanut oil for 3 to 4 minutes over medium heat until soft and just starting to brown. Remove from skillet, set aside and add to the egg mixture when adding the chives.

Asparagus Variation

Preheat oven to 500 degrees. Omit the potatoes, and chives or parsley in the above recipe. Snap or trim the stalks of one pound asparagus. Place on a baking sheet and coat very lightly with olive oil. Place in oven and roast until barely limp and bright green, 5 to 8 minutes depending on the thickness of the asparagus. Remove from the oven and lower the temperature to 450 degrees. Proceed with the recipe at step two. Reduce the amount of salt to 1/2 teaspoon and add 1/4-cup freshly grated Parmesan cheese to the egg mixture. Add the asparagus to the skillet in place of the potatoes.

Late winter pruning of trees and shrubs

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

From high above the icy snow-covered terrain, the piercing call of a handsome flicker momentarily disrupted the peaceful solitude of the stark winter landscape. Moments later, the distinctively marked woodpecker swooped from its perch and descended to the frozen pond below, the black crescent across its chest clearly visible from afar. A quick sip from a tiny opening created by the bubbling pump and it was in flight again, the telltale white rump flashing as it disappeared into the underbrush.

A year ago, my spring cleanup was well underway by this first week of March. Glistening white snowdrops, saffron yellow crocuses, and deep violet blue dwarf iris were in full bloom, dotting the gardens with cheerful abandon. Last year's record-breaking warm winter season delivered an especially early spring, a dramatic contrast to this year's endless winter and our perpetual snow-covered landscapes. How I long for warmer weather, bare earth and springtime flowers!

Shoveling snow continues to dominate my outdoor activities although tiny patches of bare ground are gradually becoming visible. As I excavated a narrow path to our front entry through the densely packed, icy white covering, it became evident that our constant barrage of winter storms has taken its toll on my foundation plantings. The weight of the melting snow has bent, broken, and squashed many well-established shrubs. Although some of these are likely to recover once the warmer weather finally arrives, others may require major pruning to repair nature's damage.

A late winter survey of your property's trees and shrubs should be performed annually. Mid-February to mid-April is the preferred time of year to prune many of these dormant deciduous plants since it is considerably easier to view their architecture and to observe damaged, diseased, or crossed branches before they leaf out. This year's winter storms have injured a wide range of woody plants leaving jagged cuts that may collect water potentially leading to disease and partially broken tree limbs, which may eventually cause the bark of the trunk to be stripped beneath the tear. Damaged or diseased stems and limbs should be pruned as soon as they are noticed to prevent the spread of infections. Should you observe crossed branches, remove at least one of the branches as the constant rubbing of one branch against another is an open invitation for disease to penetrate the damaged bark.

Shoveling snow continues to dominate my outdoor activities although tiny patches of bare ground are gradually becoming visible.

Learning to prune effectively requires practice. A poor pruning job is analogous to giving a bad haircut. Barring the infiltration of disease, the tree or shrub will nearly always recover, regrow, and be ready for another trim later in the season or the following year allowing for correction of any gross mistakes. The acquisition of a good reference book on pruning will greatly assist with helpful illustrations and recommendations on the appropriate timing of pruning particular plant species. Our local county extension service usually offers annual workshops during March to demonstrate proper pruning techniques.

Purchase and use the proper tools. Quality tools make the job easier, last longer, and produce cleaner cuts facilitating the healing process. Bypass pruners and loppers tend to be preferred by nurserymen, their scissors-like action enabling cleaner, closer cuts. High quality pruners, like the Swiss-made Felco, are worth the additional cost for their durability, precision, and the fact that they have replaceable blades. Avoid anvil-style pruners that have one sharp blade with an opposing flat blunt edge as these may crush stems and produce uneven cuts. Inexpensive pruners also tend to produce ragged cuts because they are easily bent out of shape. Hand pruners are preferred for twigs and smaller branches up to half an inch across. Long-handled lopping shears are useful for cutting larger branches up to 2 inches thick.

Curved-blade pruning saws are usually designed to cut only on the pull-stroke and are ideal for larger branches and great for tight places. Bow saws cut on both the push and pull strokes but require more room to maneuver. Both of these types of saws are available in models with replaceable blades.

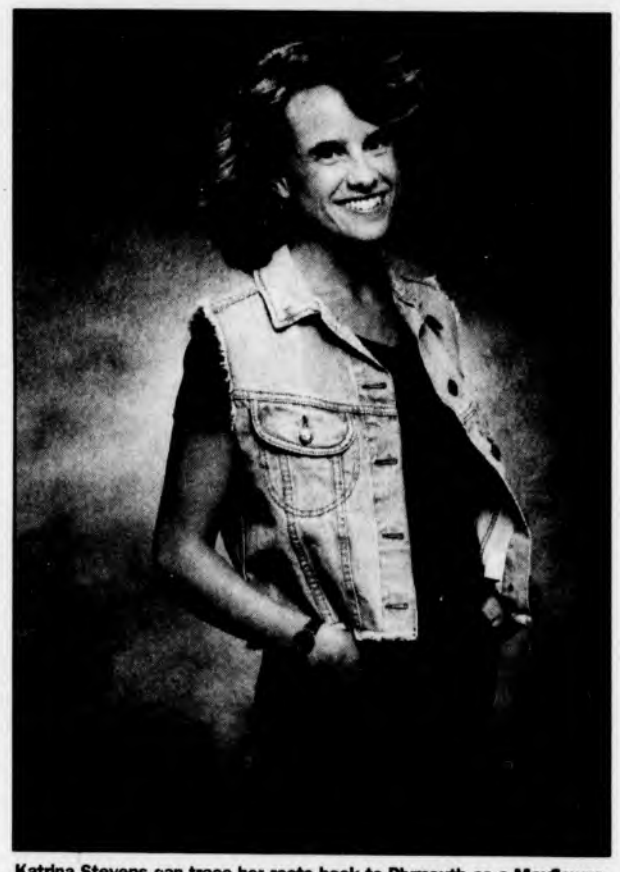
To shorten a woody stem, always cut back to a bud. On branches where the buds alternate, cut the stem at an angle and cut away from an outward facing bud to encourage growth away from the interior spaces of your shrub or tree unless you are striving to fill a gap which may have been produced by storm damage. If the plant has opposite buds, cut immediately above a strong pair. Do not leave stubs as these may develop disease but be careful not to prune too closely to a bud, which may cause the bud to dry out.

When pruning entire branches from the trunk of a tree, cuts should be made just beyond the ridge (above the branch) and the collar (a swollen area below the point of the branch's attachment to the trunk). Sawing a branch too closely to the trunk may disrupt the healing process or may stimulate growth around the site of the wound producing new, unwanted sprouts. It is not necessary to apply paint to the wound as this application may actually interfere with the plant's natural healing ability.

Enjoy the sights, sounds and fragrances of spring at the New England Spring Flower Show at the Bayside Expo, March 15-23. A wide selection of pruning tools is available from the marketplace and the Massachusetts Horticultural Society Bookstore offers an excellent collection of gardening reference books.

Actress comes in 'Contact' with her heritage

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT



Katrina Stevens can trace her roots back to Plymouth as a Mayflower Descendent.

In the musical "contact," three sensual stories are told entirely through dance. Each is set in a different era, but all concern people in the wild pursuit of love.

Actress and theater professional Katrina Stevens, assistant stage manager for the national tour of the musical currently at Boston's Wang Theatre, believes the show makes a simple statement that resonates profoundly in today's world climate. "This show is all about making human contact as opposed to duct taping yourself in your house," Stevens explained by telephone last week from Nashville. "The message of "contact" is that reaching out to other people is what will save you."

Directed and choreographed by Susan Stroman, "contact" is performed to a wide range of music — from Stephane Grappelli's rendition of Rodger's and Hart's "My Heart Stood Still," to pieces by Grieg, Tchaikovsky andBizet to Robert Palmer, Dean Martin, The Beach Boys, and The Squirrel Nut Zippers by a company of 24 dancer/actors.

Stevens is quick to acknowledge that those elements also helped earn "Contact" the Tony Award for Best Musical and just about every other major theater award given in 2000. "This show has great music and a beautiful, talented cast. Not only are the performers are excellent dancers, but they're also fine actors. They help make the show both a thrilling and meaningful experience."

A graduate of the drama program at Duke University, Stevens's own experiences include both acting and stage management. The Bath, Maine native has appeared as an actress on television, in regional theater, and on Broadway. Her current assignment marks her first stage management gig in eight years and a return to her roots.

"In my senior year at Duke, I interned for New York producer Emanuel Azenberg on a pre-Broadway tryout of "Long Day's Journey Into Night," which starred Jack Lemmon and Kevin Spacey. Right out of college, Mr. Azenberg hired me again as a production assistant for the New York production of "Broadway Bound." Mr. Azenberg is now one of the general managers of the "contact" tour which is one of the main reasons I decided to take this job."

Another was the involvement of Stroman, one of Broadway's leading creative talents and the choreographer responsible for recent stage hits like "Show Boat," "The Music Man" and "The Producers."

"This show has given me the chance to work with Susan Stroman. She is, of course, an amazingly gifted individual. She is also the most involved of any director I have ever worked with on a national tour. It's great just to watch her work."

As assistant stage manager, Stevens has a lot to watch. "I go back and forth backstage making sure everything is moving smoothly, because on a tour like this we work with different local stage hands in each city."

Until recently, Boston was the city Stevens called home. "When I took this job, I gave up my apartment. My stuff is in storage right now, while I travel."

Stevens may not have not have a place to call home right now, but she does have roots on the South Shore that trace all the way back to the 17th century. Her ancestors on both sides of her family came over on the Mayflower.

"My mother's family is descended from, Jonathan Fairbanks, the first mate on the Mayflower," Stevens explains. "My father can trace his own ancestry to another crew member on the ship who later settled on Georgetown Island, off of Bath, Maine. My mother is originally from the Boston area, but grew up in St. Louis. She met my father on a family vacation to Maine when she was a young woman. The Mayflower connection was a pure coincidence."

And a happy one at that, according to Stevens. It isn't something we flaunt or boast about, but it is certainly a source of pride within my family that our ancestors came over on the Mayflower."

(The national tour of "contact" will be at the Wang Theatre, 270 Tremont Street, Boston, through March 9. For tickets and information, call 1-800-447-7400 or visit www.broadwayinboston.com.)

Board Certified-Hearing Instrument Specialist, MA Lic. #127

DID YOU KNOW?

Did you know the pressure on the ear created by holding a phone to it all day can damage the cochlea, the snail-shaped "seat" of the hearing organ? If you talk on the phone for several hours daily, therefore, it is advisable to use a speaker phone. Were you aware that truck drivers tend to have significantly more hearing loss in their left ears (because they are closer to the window)? This shows just how destructive and insidious noise can be over the course of many years. And, did you know that both high blood pressure and high cholesterol are bad not only for your heart, but also for your ears (because they restrict blood flow to the inner ear)?

The first step toward better hearing is recognizing that a hearing problem exists. Having your hearing tested is the second step. If the signs are there – asking people to repeat themselves, turning up the volume on the TV, or frequently misunderstanding what is being said – please call us at 781-337-1144. We have the answers to many of the questions you'll no doubt have regarding your hearing impairment. From fittings to follow-up care from a board certified hearing instrument specialist, you can rely on FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER. We're located in Weymouth at 534 Main Street (Rte. 18), across from the Stetson Bldg., and we accept most HMOs, State GIC, Union Benefits, and Mass Health.

P.S. High doses of aspirin and ibuprofen have been found to paralyze the outer hair cells of the cochlea, scrambling the sound signals headed to the brain.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 5

An Aries moon sets a fast pace today and tomorrow. You can be most productive, if you carefully organize your time and stick to your game plan. New starts in your business or personal life are recommended. Explore options, make long-range plans and set new goals. Get back in the swing of favorite sports and exercise programs.

THURSDAY, MARCH 6

Yesterday's planetary influences continue today. The Aries moon forms harmonious contacts to planets until 8:10 p.m., when it aligns with Uranus. Roll up your sleeves and plan to get a lot accomplished. Zero in on jobs that require physical labor and exertion. At 8:36 p.m. the moon enters Taurus, and forms a harmonious contact to Mars at 11:35 p.m. Love is the name of the game this evening.

FRIDAY, MARCH 7

It may be difficult to get back to business today. The moon travels in Taurus, forming 90-degree alignments to Venus in the morning, Jupiter in the afternoon and Neptune in the evening. That means that this is a great day to hang out, relax, enjoy favorite pastimes and friends. On the other hand, don't overdo, overindulge, spend money on impulse. Sleep on new ideas and postpone taking action for a few days.

SATURDAY, MARCH 8

The moon continues its travel in Taurus, active throughout the day. In addition, Venus, the planetary ruler of Taurus, prepares to oppose Jupiter. Read yesterday's advice. Indulge yourself and enjoy the good things in life; however, know your limits. This planetary combination also makes this day prime for social or romantic get-togethers.

SUNDAY, MARCH 9

A lunar alignment to Uranus at 9:29 a.m. may disrupt the flow of the morning. Take it slow and easy. Avoid rigid time schedules. At this time the Taurus moon becomes inactive until 9:38 a.m., when it enters loquacious Gemini. In addition, Venus opposes Jupiter at 11:17 p.m. This day tops the charts for fun and games. Put recent pressures on the back burner. Gather with friends and let the good times roll.

MONDAY, MARCH 10

The planet Uranus takes center stage today. At 3:54 p.m. Uranus enters Pisces, remaining there until March 2011. In addition, the sun forms a 90-degree alignment to Pluto at 4:47 p.m. This combination of planetary energies urges you to let go of old fears and limited thinking; open your mind to new possibilities. Uranus brings freedom, change, new inventions, major discoveries. The moon continues active travel in versatile Gemini.

TUESDAY, MARCH 11

The first quarter phase of the moon occurs at 2:15 a.m. A full moon is building and will culminate next Tuesday, March 18. The Gemini moon conjoins Saturn at 6:24 a.m. and becomes inactive. It can be difficult to focus on work projects and easy to waste time and energy. People will be sociable, talkative, but easily distracted from practical matters. Finish old business, rather than starting anything new. Take extra time out for social and leisure activities. The moon enters the sign Cancer at 9:12 p.m.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 12

The Cancer moon opposes Mars at 6:29 a.m., warning you to wake up in a good mood. Allow extra time. Fortunately, this influence passes over quickly, and an alignment of Venus and Neptune takes over. All creative and artistic projects are highlighted. Go on a cooking or baking spree. Beautify your home or work area; redecorate, repaint, purchase new appliances or furniture.

THURSDAY, MARCH 13

This day begins with a 90-degree alignment of the sun and Saturn, reminding you to zero in on responsibilities you have taken on. You may have to face the facts about situations, and take action. Others may be grouchy, difficult to please. Don't make waves. The Cancer moon interacts with the Pisces sun at 4:13 p.m. and becomes inactive. Kick back, relax and unwind this evening.

FRIDAY, MARCH 14

The moon enters Leo at 5:06 a.m., generating an upbeat mood today and tomorrow. Take advantage of this break in a stormy period, and plan to get important projects off the ground. Planetary influences are particularly favorable before 8:31 p.m., when the moon and expansive Jupiter conjoin. The green light is on for new starts across the board, in your business or personal life. Put on your party hat and go for the good times this evening.

Aides to get the ax

More cuts if override fails

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

School Committee meetings aren't usually a big draw. So despite the importance of the budget discussion, it was no surprise last Thursday with the addition of 6-8 ins. of new snow and the accompanying slick roadways that attendance from the public was almost non existent.

But when Heidi Salerno watched the meeting live on cable-TV and heard the School Committee's plans to cut virtually all the teacher aides at Osgood and replace them with volunteers to save upwards of $60,000 – she braved the snowstorm to make an appearance.

The mother of two elementary school-aged children said activity aides, like herself, do more than supervise recess.

"Times have changed," said Salerno, adding aides are trained to deal with "life and death" situations including food allergies and other health issues, as well as behavior problems. She questioned how

Lieb-Lappen wins science scholarship

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Ross Lieb-Lappen may not know what he wants to study in college, but one thing is for sure — he loves science and has a passion for the great outdoors.

Those interests have propelled Lieb-Lappen to heights he never expected. This spring, he became the third Cohasset High School senior in three years to win the Henry David Thoreau Scholarship.

"I've just had great teachers and our science department is really strong."
— Ross Lieb-Lappen, CHS senior

The scholarship, now in its fourth year of existence, provides $30,000 over four years to college students pursuing interests in the environment. All high school seniors in Massachusetts are eligible to apply. According to Northeast Educational Services, the orga-

Another crack at bylaw

Selectmen are split on ledge TM article

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

A proposed bylaw intended to protect natural ledge will go before annual Town Meeting for the second year in a row.

The bylaw would make removal of ledge eight feet tall or higher require a special permit from the Zoning Board of Appeals.

The ZBA could deny the permit if it found the ledge removal would create drainage or public safety problems or be "detrimental to the character of the Town, locale or neighboring area." The bylaw would not apply to municipal projects, work relating to public utilities or repairs to existing septic systems.

The bylaw would not apply to municipal projects, work relating to public utilities or repairs to existing septic systems.

A similar article at Town Meeting last spring failed to garner the necessary two-thirds support it needed to pass. With a vote of 191-146, the article fell more than 30 votes short of approval.

Some selectmen initially questioned why the article appeared again on the warrant this year, saying it should abide by the traditional two-year waiting period after being rejected.

But the Planning Board, which proposed the article, is the only town board that has the authority to ignore the two-year rule. Regardless of that fact, Planning Board members said this year's version has been changed enough to allow it to be reconsidered under state law.

Those changes include a provision that allows for the removal of not more than 10 cubic yards of ledge per year from individual lots. In addition, the bylaw no longer requires site plans for ledge removal for the Zoning Board and the definition of ledge has been altered.

Mark DeGiacomo, a supporter of ledge preservation, said the changes addressed concerns expressed at Town Meeting last year, particularly by allowing homeowners to do small projects that involve blasting.

DeGiacomo said ledge could face extinction if the town does not act. "Properties where people assumed the property could never be built upon are now being built upon because the value of the land outweighs the cost of the blasting, and that's going to continue," he said.

The ledge article promises to be one of the more hotly debated items on the floor of Town Meeting on March 29. Selectmen discussed the article last Thursday in hopes of making a recommendation on it before the warrant went to print. But a 2-2 tie forced the board to defer recommendation because Selectman Merle Brown was absent.

Proponents of the bylaw said it will protect one of Cohasset's most treasured and unique natural assets. Opponents said it would infringe upon property rights and create a blurry criteria for accepting or denying special permits.

Planning Board member Bob Sturdy, who was the lone dissenting vote in that board's decision to recommend the arti-

Rails-trails takes step

$25K study is recommended

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Thanks to the Community Preservation Act, a feasibility study of a pedestrian and bike trail along the Cohasset stretch of the Greenbush rail corridor could soon be a reality.

On Tuesday, the Community Preservation Committee voted 5 to 2 to recommend at Town Meeting that the $25,000 study be paid for by the Community Preservation Fund. The proposed trail would run from Hingham to Scituate, perhaps extending beyond the last stop of the Greenbush line and into the North River estuary.

Board of Health Chairman Steve Bobo and Health Agent Joseph Godzik brought the idea to the CPC, saying it would promote the health of residents by providing a much needed avenue for exercise. The duo was joined by Mark Fenton, a Scituate resident and leader of a local citizens' group, People for Active Transportation and Health (PATH).

Fenton was instrumental in securing a recommendation for $40,000 from the Scituate CPC for a feasibility study there. The project was sidelined, however, when the recent six-month delay in Greenbush construction caused the town to reconsider how it should spend its community preservation money. Fenton will ask for funding again at Scituate's special town meeting later this year.

Fenton gave Cohasset's CPC a long list of reasons why rails with trails was a good idea. He said one study showed

Smoking article includes patios

Outdoor patio areas at restaurants will be subject to a new ban on smoking in all public places and workplaces, if the new bylaw is approved at Town Meeting.

The Board of Health, which drafted the warrant article, initially forgot to include outdoor patio areas at restaurants in the list of places where smoking is banned. When Selectmen reviewed the bylaw last month, they pointed out the omission. The Board of Health revisited the bylaw and corrected the language.

Selectmen request new runway review

Selectmen are sending a letter to the state Attorney General requesting a new environmental impact report on a proposed new runway at Logan Airport. They are asking Hingham and Hull to write letters also.

A previous report on the impact of the runway has been criticized for exaggerating the need of a new runway. Ralph Dormitzer, a Logan runway opponent, told Selectmen earlier this year that the study exaggerates by a factor of 10 the current delays at the airport.

Sen. Bob Hedlund, R-Weymouth, and Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, have already contacted the Attorney General about a new review, according to Town Manager Mark Haddad.

Selectman Fred Koed said attempts to get state Secretary of Environmental Affairs Ellen Roy Herzfelder to request a new review had failed.

Hynes drops plan to change CPA

A plan to amend the Community Preservation Act to give towns more flexibility in tough financial times has been abandoned.

In a letter to Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan, Rep. Frank Hynes, D-Marshfield, said widespread negative reaction had forced legislators to drop the plan.

In towns where the CPA has been adopted, funds are raised through a property tax surcharge and are spent on three areas: open space, historical preservation and community housing. A plan that Hynes supported earlier this year would have allowed for communities to spend that funding in other areas if they felt it necessary. Selectmen wrote to Hynes in protest when they learned of the plan.

"The outcry against this proposal has been so loud and strong that it has now been abandoned," Hynes wrote in his letter to Sullivan. "Legislators have been impressed not only with the arguments you and others advance but also with the recognition that tampering with the CPA would violate the trust which municipalities accepted when they adopted the CPA."

Historical society seeks assistant

The Cohasset Historical Society is moving its headquarters to the former public library, doubling its space for collections storage and display. The society seeks an organized and experienced individual to work part-time under the direction of the co-presidents. Duties will include re-housing the collections and archives, developing public programming and exhibits, grant writing, coordinating volunteers, and general administrative tasks. For further information, please contact Paula Kozol or Kathy O'Malley, co-presidents, at 781-383-0141.

Door closes on house permit bylaw changes

Two warrant articles nixed

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Two articles were dropped from the Town Meeting warrant last week, both of which involved changes to the zoning bylaws and appeared to respond to issues stemming from the controversy at 3 Jerusalem Lane.

That situation has led to concern that homes with possible "permitting snags" could receive building permits and end up in lawsuits with the town. It has also highlighted residents' concerns about the tearing down of older, smaller houses to make way for larger homes.

One article proposed by the Planning Board that has been sidelined would have required building permits to be reviewed by the Board of Health, the Conservation Commission, and the Planning Board before final approval.

A second article submitted by the Growth and Development Committee would have required new houses more than 3,000 square feet or more than 10 percent of their lot area, up to 6,000 square feet, to apply for a special permit and undergo a site plan review by the Planning Board.

Both articles were reviewed by the Planning Board in a public hearing last Wednesday. Planning Board member Bob Sturdy said the article regarding building permits was dropped after Town Counsel questioned its legality.

Sturdy told Selectmen last Thursday he did not fully understand Town Counsel's concerns. He said the article would prevent "fiascoes like 3 Jerusalem Lane" by giving other boards a chance to spot any potential snags in the permitting process. He said currently the building inspector could only deny a building permit if he found a violation of the zoning bylaws, even if a problem with obtaining permits from other boards was anticipated.

"The idea is to try to accommodate the public," Sturdy said. "It might take a few days for you to get the (building) permit but when you get it, you know you can go forward without any problems."

Sturdy said he drafted the article after a conversation with Town Counsel and was upset that it was now being dropped. "I'm not particularly happy with Town Counsel on this," he told Selectmen.

Members of the Growth and Development Committee dropped the article requiring a special permit and site plan review for larger homes after reviewing it with the Planning Board. The committee decided to hold the article until fall Town Meeting to allow for changes.

Growth and Development Committee member Tom Callahan, who is also a selectman, said the requirement for a special permit would be dropped from the article. Also, he said, the town's site plan review process needed to be modified because it was geared more toward commercial properties.

Callahan said the committee would review the site plan review process in Weston, where the bylaw was adopted from.

According to previous drafts of the warrant, the goal of the article was to insure large houses are built with notice to abutters and in a manner consistent with surrounding properties.

Callahan said removing the special permit requirement would mean the bylaw would have "less teeth in terms of its enforceability" but would be a more cooperative process.

Blackfin sails into Siros site

Opens later this month

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Anthony Ambrose may be one of the only people who can stand amid wet paint, drop cloths and the sound of power drills and still make you think about a sirloin steak and au gratin potatoes.

The chef turned restaurateur likes to talk with his hands while he describes the vision he and Dorene, his wife and partner — who also own Ambrosia on Huntington — have for the former Siros on Main Street.

Ambrose, who is the former executive chef at the Bostonian and Hotel Meridien, describes bringing the 1766 colonial back to its roots, giving the interior a sea captain's house look with mahogany paneling and rich colors – a work still in progress. But he never travels far from food which he describes with such contagious energy that you can almost hear the grill sizzling and feel the warmth of patrons chatting at the bar over large beers and raw oysters.

As it turns out the transformation of Siros into the Blackfin Chop House and Raw Bar is a good new story all around. The business is staying in the family. Kristie Henriksen, Siros owner, sold the lease to the Ambroses. Henriksen's husband Tom Fallon is Dorene's father. They all live in Cohasset and made the decision over a recent holiday meal, according to Anthony, who good naturedly pestered Henriksen over the years to sell him the site. The move enables Henriksen to focus on her other restaurants, especially the popular Siros on Hull's waterfront which has become a magnet for wedding parties.

In fact Ambrose had his eye on the property when it became available back in 1998 – only to be beaten to the deal by his father-in-law and Henriksen. Ambrose declined to give any monetary details about the recent sale inked appropriately on Valentine's Day – but it appeared during an interview Monday that all sides were happy.

The new restaurant will open later this month.

So passionate is Ambrose about the property, which has three working fireplaces, that he pitched in with the sanding and staining of the wood floors himself. The smaller dining and meeting rooms upstairs will all have a nautical flare and colors, such as Nantucket blue.

The name Blackfin, not only conjures up tuna, but is also a sport fish. Sport fishing is one of Ambrose's other passions.

"I cook better than I fish, but I'm working on it," jokes Ambrose, who explains steak and chop houses were popular in the 50s and 60s, so this new idea actually harks back to old traditions, casual comfort and affordability.

"Customers here will be comfortable in polo shirts, shorts and dock-siders," says Ambrose, adding entrees will range from $17-$24. "They can kick back and have a dry-aged sirloin and a strong scotch.

"The same thing you pay $40 at Grille 23 you can get for $24 here."

Dorene describes the environment as "extremely down to earth and unpretentious." The Ambroses, who have two young children, had looked at finding a site for their concept in town. But the Hingham location makes sense geographically because it plants the couple closer to home some of the time. They will continue to operate Ambrosia on Huntington.

According to the Hingham Historical Commission, the restaurant history of 1217 Main St. began in 1938 when Otto and Herberta N. Kley purchased the property, establishing a restaurant known as "Country Fare." Subsequent owners changed the name to the Whiton House, after Daniel Whiton (1722-1768) who built the present colonial house. Siros on Main Street replaced the Whiton House, which closed in June 1997 after 16 years.

The 4.07-acre site is owned by A. W. Perry, Inc.

Flag depository at American Legion

The American Legion, George H. Mealy Post 118 in Cohasset has a way for the public to be able to bring them their tattered and worn flags so they may be properly and ceremoniously destroyed. The Flag Depository, located in front of the legion post at 98 Summer St., has the look and shape of an American flag. This solid metal Flag Depository protects the flags until they are removed for storage and kept until the time of the desecration ceremony. The Herb Chambers Automobile Dealerships made this new service possible through a donation to the post. Everyone is invited to bring his or her retired flags to the depository.

New school budget has no room for teacher aides volunteers would handle the privacy issues.

Salerno also said the aides pitched in earlier Thursday helping to handle some 60 phone calls in about an hour's time from parents concerned about the snowstorm and to give messages about whether their child should take the bus.

"I think it's an easy figure to cut but we are people who actually help the school run," she said.

But the School Committee said it had little wiggle room in the budget and had to come up with $100,000 in cuts and identify an additional $75,000 (already in the budget for other purposes) for custodial-cleaning services. [Additional custodial services are needed to clean and maintain the new school buildings; the school department is studying whether to go with an outside cleaning service, keep the service in-house or a combination of both.]

The School Committee will present an $11,177,297 budget to Town Meeting on March 30, which is $100,000 less than the budget it approved last month. Even with that, the town and school budgets are out of balance and dependant on a successful $350,000 Prop. 2-1/2 override ballot vote on April 5. If the override should fail, the schools will have to absorb another $210,000 in cuts (see charts), Supt. Edward Malvey said. [The town budget would absorb $140,000].

The School Committee said cutting aides is a way to trim a fairly large number from the budget without affecting class sizes. In addition to a corps of volunteers, the committee said teachers may have to pitch in with recess and lunch duty as is the case in other school districts.

"We want cuts to have the least impact on educational services," member Chartis Tebbetts said. The committee conceded a volunteer coordinator may ultimately be needed, but wanted to give the program a try.

Chairman Rick Flynn said there may be contractual issues to be worked out before teachers could be assigned to recess and lunch duty.

Member Mark DeGiacomo told Salerno the cut was not done in a "cavalier style."

"We know you're doing a great job and this is going to be difficult," he said, pointing out the Osgood activity aides line item adds up to almost two teachers.

Pat Martin said the School Committee was in a position "where things have to go." And Jane Pescatore said the "challenge is to look at doing things differently than in the past."

The School Committee also explained the cuts were all predicated on Gov. Mitt Romney's budget. It is not clear how the House and Senate versions of the budget will mesh with the governor's, and if they don't, more cuts in local aid could be around the corner.

Allison Moskow, an elementary school parent concerned about cutting the aides, questioned why middle school athletics — with a total cost of $72,000 including transportation — were not in the first round of cuts. She noted that sports booster clubs can help out with the expense.

But the School Committee estimated the middle school "no cut" athletic program draws 80 percent participation.

"It's the perfect anecdote to the age group," Martin said.

If the override shouldn't pass, the School Committee said it would look at reductions to the middle school athletic program, including the possibility of fees for transportation.

Proposed school cuts if Romney's budget holds:
- 7 activity aides at Osgood-Deer Hill, $62,928
- 1 nurse aide, $17,846
- 1 library aide at CHS, $17,846
- Supply reductions, $25,000
- Reading teacher at CMHS, $40,000
- Miscellaneous cuts from various salary accounts, $11,380*

Dr. Malvey explained sometimes "salary steps" are rounded up in the budget and he will "fine tune" all the numbers.*

Additional potential cuts on the table if override fails:
- Reduce Middle school athletic program, $35,000
- Reductions in elementary PE, music & art, $60,000
- Technology aide at Osgood, $27,319
- Deer Hill teacher, $40,000
- Proposed CHS math teacher, $40,000
- Clerical aide at Osgood, $12,708
- Elementary librarian, $43,000 (remaining librarian to be shared between Deer Hill and Osgood)

School Committee would seek input from principals before deciding on which of these cuts to make in order to reach the $210,000 needed should the override fail.

Lieb-Lappen wins $30K college science scholarship

nization that grants the scholarship, 10 to 12 scholars are chosen from a pool of about 200 applicants each year.

In winning the scholarship, Lieb-Lappen will follow in the footsteps of two other Cohasset High students. Chris Golden, now a sophomore at Harvard, won the Thoreau Scholarship two years ago. Charlie Anderson, a freshman at Bowdoin College in Maine, won it last year.

"I knew Charlie won. I figured I might as well go for it," said Lieb-Lappen, who will attend Middlebury College in Vermont in the fall.

As part of his scholarship, Lieb-Lappen will chose a faculty advisor who will serve as a mentor for his environmental studies throughout his four years of college. Between his junior and senior years, he'll receive a stipend for a summer internship. After he graduates, he'll become a member of the Henry David Thoreau Society for the Environment, whose members write a digest about their research and experiences.

Lieb-Lappen could probably fill his own digest about his research and experiences to date. For the past two summers, he worked at the Center for Student Coastal Research on the Hagerty Property. Along with teachers Dr. Ann Thomae and Patricia McGrail, and with the help of Cohasset Maritime Institute director Jack Buckley and his boats, Lieb-Lappen, Anderson, and other students tested water for dissolved oxygen and salinity to determine if it was safe for catching lobsters.

Last spring, Lieb-Lappen traveled with teachers and students to Costa Rica during vacation to study environmental science. "It really sparked my interest," he said.

Lieb-Lappen said he's excited to be going to school in Vermont, where his family has owned a log cabin for several years. "That's what really got me interested in science," he said. "I just like being out in nature. Fresh air, woods, mountains. That's why I like Vermont."

When it comes to giving credit, Lieb-Lappen said his teachers at Cohasset High School have been nothing short of inspirational. "I've just had great teachers and our science department is really strong," he said.

David Magnussen, head of the science department, is ecstatic that Cohasset High students have won the Thoreau Scholarship three years running. He said Lieb-Lappen, Anderson and Golden were strong students who worked as hard outside the classroom as they did inside.

"I think the key is that not only have they done a lot of backbreaking academic work, but they've done a lot of work in the field as well," he said.

Magussen said environmental science was quickly catching on at the high school. "We have made a conscious choice to move away from what I would call an old fashioned curriculum and towards a more modern curriculum that would include environmental science," he said. "I think we have a very strong science staff here, all of whom have an interest in the environment. I think that's one of the reasons all these kids have gone in this direction."

Town meeting voters to get another crack at ledge bylaw

cle at Town Meeting, said determining whether ledge removal is "detrimental to the character of the Town" is too subjective of a process. He compared the bylaw to regulating house design or the removal of mature trees. "We can't really regulate the esthetics of the property," Sturdy said.

But Selectman Tom Callahan, who supported the article, said any argument over property rights was "just a red herring." He cited the purpose of zoning as stated in the bylaws: "to preserve and protect the outstanding characteristics and natural beauty of the town."

Callahan said this bylaw was no different than existing bylaws that regulate the removal of dirt. "It's another regulation of land use," he said. "That's what the zoning bylaws are all about."

Selectman Fred Koed agreed, saying that a special permit process would allow neighbors to voice possible concerns about serious ledge removal through a public hearing. "I think neighbors have an interest in what their neighbors are doing, and this is to address that," he said.

But Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan and Selectman Ronnie McMorris opposed the article on the basis that it stripped too much control from property owners.

"I think its a serious interference with an individual's property rights," said McMorris. "In order to do that, we need an overriding public reason and I just don't see that with the ledge."

After hearing Selectmen debate the bylaw, the Advisory Committee voted 5 to 1 to not recommend the article. Some members said they were opposed to the fact that repairs to septic systems were exempt from the bylaw but expansion of septic systems was not.

Rails-with-trails study on docket

that property values along the corridor would appreciate because of the trails. Another study contracted by the U.S. Department of Transportation showed that rails with trails — when properly constructed using fences —were actually safer than rails without trails because patrols would reduce illegal activity and trespassing.

The project would cost an estimated $800,000 in Cohasset alone, Fenton said, but federal funding was a distinct possibility. In the past month, he has contacted legislators, such as Congressman William Delahunt, state Sen. Robert Hedlund and state Sen. Frank Hynes. While Delahunt said he planned on submitting the Greenbush trail project for federal funding under the Transportation Enhancement Act, Hedlund received a letter from Sect. Of Transportation and MBTA chairman Daniel Grabauskas, who said he would instruct the MBTA to "cooperate with any study that the towns commission."

"The squishy tree-hugger in me loves this project. The fiscal watchdog doesn't."

— Selectman Tom Callahan

Fenton said the likelihood that the MBTA would embrace the project was high because a report by the state Senate Post-audit and Oversight Committee chastised the agency for not being open to alternative modes of transportation. He said new rails-with-trails projects in Somerville, Plymouth and at North Station in Boston were probably in response to that report.

Fenton said a feasibility study would give the project a more accurate price tag and point out areas where potential problems could develop — for example, where wetlands or a narrow berm might complicate designs. The study would also find out what right the town would exercise over the land — whether it would have a license or an easement. The study would consider the trail project under two scenarios — if Greenbush went ahead, and if it was abandoned.

Members of the CPC were cool to the proposal at first because they worried that the study could be no more than a waste of $25,000.

Tom Callahan, the Selectmen's representative on the CPC, questioned whether the MBTA would actually cooperate with the project. "The squishy tree-hugger in me loves this project," he said. "The fiscal watchdog doesn't."

Debbie Cook, another CPC member, said the potential destruction of more wetlands troubled her. She said the trail might not be appealing to all residents. "It's very isolated at some points and I don't know how seniors and little kids would feel," she said.

But Fenton said the delay in Greenbush construction presented a unique opportunity — if the feasibility study was a success, trail designs could be incorporated if and when construction resumed.

"There are so many unanswered questions that to let an idea like this die just because those questions are unanswered just wouldn't be right," he said. "Essentially, there's a door open now."

Before making a motion to recommend funding the study, CPC member Jim Dedes seemed to sooth concerns that the money may not lead to a finished product. "Yeah, it might not go forward," he said. "That's why you do a feasibility study."

When the vote was taken, Cook and CPC chairman Stuart Ivimey were the only members opposed.

Selectmen will review the CPC's recommendations for funding at their next meeting, March 18 at 7:30 p.m.. The CPC will then present their recommendations to Town Meeting on March 29.

Assessors propose higher exemptions

The Board of Assessors has proposed to raise real estate tax exemptions for veterans, the elderly and the blind. The exemptions would increase by between $125 and $300 and would need approval at Town Meeting on March 29.

"It is the position of the Board that this increase would be of great assistance to residents of Cohasset, enabling some to maintain residency in town," wrote Deputy Assessor Mary Quill in a letter to the Board of Selectmen.

The Zoning Board of Appeals will have its hands full Monday night.

The board will meet at 7:30 p.m. in Town Hall to decide whether 3 Jerusalem Lane should be granted a special permit. The board ruled in January that the building inspector erred in granting owners Phil and Mary Anne Ayer a building permit because the home is on a non-conforming, or undersized, lot. Neighbors will argue Monday that the home is "detrimental to the neighborhood" and should not receive a special permit.

Neighbors will argue Monday that the home is "detrimental to the neighborhood" and should not receive a special permit.

The Zoning Board will also rule Monday on an appeal from Roberta Sawyer, a lawyer for the Ayers, who requested that the town require other homes built under similar circumstances to 3 Jerusalem Lane to apply for special permits. Building inspector Bob Egan previously denied that request, saying the case of 3 Jerusalem Lane was not immediately applicable to any other case.

The Planning Board, which offers an opinion to the Zoning Board on most of its decisions, has recommended that 3 Jerusalem be denied a special permit because it eliminates neighbors' views, making it detrimental to the neighborhood. The Planning Board has also said that Sawyer and the Ayers do not qualify as an aggrieved party in relation to the other homes the have requested enforcement on, meaning they would have not standing in an appeal to the Zoning Board.

Amnesty article for illegal apartments is scrutinized

Town Meeting to have final say

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

A warrant article that would give amnesty to illegal apartments in hopes of creating affordable housing may need to be opened up and changed on the floor of Town Meeting.

Selectman Ronnie McMorris argued last week that the bylaw does not go far enough to protect the single-family character of Cohasset. Her opinion swayed the vote of the Planning Board, which reversed its earlier decision and voted 2 to 1 to not recommend the article at Town Meeting.

Drafted by the Growth and Development Committee, the new bylaw would grant comprehensive permits for existing illegal accessory units, provided they remain affordable as defined by Chapter 40B, the state's affordable housing law.

The bylaw is modeled after a similar program in Barnstable, where 50 affordable units have come online since it was instituted.

The bylaw is modeled after a similar program in Barnstable, where 50 affordable units have come online since it was instituted.

To make use of the bylaw, homeowners would need to bring their apartments up to code, negotiate a deed restriction with the town and rent the apartment to a family or person whose income is 80 percent or less of the median income in the Boston metropolitan area. In accordance with state law, rent could be no more than 30 percent of that income. For the first year of the program, tenants would be screened by the Cohasset Housing Authority to guarantee they qualify for low or moderate income housing.

Selectman Tom Callahan, who is also a member of the Growth and Development Committee, said the bylaw would not solve all of Cohasset's affordable housing woes but would be "a sign of good faith to the state that we're making 40B progress."

But last week the amnesty bylaw was scrutinized by some town officials.

"This brings 40B next door to every person in this town," said Planning Board member Bob Sturdy, who was originally the lone dissenting vote when the Planning Board voted 2 to 1 to recommend the article at Town Meeting.

But when McMorris said the bylaw needed more conditions — like those in last year's accessory dwelling bylaw — to protect the single-family character of the town, Planning Board member Bill Good agreed. The board reopened its vote and decided 2 to 1 to not recommend the article.

Callahan vowed to revisit the article and asked fellow Selectmen to defer their recommendation until Town Meeting. He stopped short, however, of making any changes to the bylaw before the warrant went to print last Friday.

Callahan and other supporters said the bylaw could end up helping efforts to turn away larger Chapter 40B developments, resulting in affordable housing that was more in the character of the town and that would not dramatically increase enrollment at schools.

Under new Chapter 40B regulations, if a town increases its affordable housing stock by three-fourths of 1 percent of the total housing units in the community each year, then the state will uphold a local zoning board's decision to deny a developer a comprehensive permit. To meet that commitment, Cohasset would need about 20 new affordable units each year.

Callahan admitted it is unknown how many units the new bylaw would produce but said it is definitely a step in the right direction. Selectmen Fred Koed agreed, noting that under Gov. Mitt Romney's new budget, some local aid would be distributed to towns in accordance with their efforts to create affordable housing.

Like the Selectmen, the Advisory Board has also deferred recommendation on the bylaw until Town Meeting.

Buddhist monks on peace beat

Pass through town Friday

By Carol Britton Meyer
CMEYER@CNC.COM

"People driving along the road can stop – safely – and join the walk for as far as they are able to go. Rides will be provided back to their cars when they're finished."
— Betty Green, local coordinator

A group of Buddhist monks is coming to town, spreading a message of peace and justice.

South Shore residents are invited to join the second annual non-denominational Peace Walk across the state. The "Walk for a New Spring, Wake Up Peace!" began at the Peace Pagoda in Leverett, Mass., Feb. 16 and will culminate at the Statehouse in Boston March 21 after passing through Hingham, Cohasset, and Scituate on Friday, March 14.

Old Ship Church will host a conversation between the monks, nuns, and community members Friday evening at 7 p.m. in the Parish House, 107 Main St. to share experiences in the search for peace. The monks will spend the night in Cohasset homes.

The walk makes a connection between perpetual wars and their effects on one's daily life. It runs from the final days of winter through the first day of Spring as "a prayer that the ardent wish for peace embedded in our hearts may arise singly and together at this most crucial time," according to the monks.

The Buddhist monks, who have shaved heads and dress in saffron-yellow robes, beat small drums as they chant ancient verses to instill a sense of quiet, peace, and perspective. They believe that every footprint left behind brings a prayer for peace to earth.

As Spring arrives, the monks look toward a rebirth of the belief in the sacredness of life and what they consider to be the "preciousness and nobility of every human being alive today."

The monks belong to the Leverett Nipponzan Myohoji Buddhist religious order, founded at the end of World War II. The pagoda was built by young Americans led by Japanese monks and nuns of the Nipponzan Myohoji order of Buddhism. Pagodas are built to house relics of the Buddha and are common in Buddhist countries. The Nipponzan Myohoji order is distinct in that the ordained do not seek personal salvation or enlightenment but rather the removal of all weapons from the earth.

The monks walk about three miles in an hour, but residents who join in when they come across the highly visible group may walk at their own pace.

"This is what they live for – prayer and the hope for peace on this planet. They work at developing a calmness in themselves and passing it on to others," said Betty Green of Weymouth, who is helping to coordinate the monks' South Shore stay. "People driving along the road can stop – safely – and join the walk for as far as they are able to go. Rides will be provided back to their cars when they're finished."

The walkers collect threads, yarns, or torn pieces of fabric along the way and consider themselves a thread binding communities together. A craftsperson has volunteered to weave a fabric of those materials for presentation at the Statehouse at a later date. Thread donations will be collected throughout the walk from those who wish to contribute to the effort.

"These are fabulous, compassionate people who really want to absorb what's in our hearts as well," Green said.

On Friday, the monks will travel from Dorchester to Quincy Center and then head down Route 3A to Pilgrim Congregational Church in Weymouth for lunch. Then they'll continue walking down Route 3A to Hingham Rotary and on to Cohasset and Scituate.. Taking part in such walks is one way those who oppose a war with Iraq can make their feelings known.

"As much as the current Administration wants to control people, we need to keep voicing our opinions so people don't just give up and think there's nothing they can do," Green said.

The monks and their supporters oppose a war with Iraq as well as racial discrimination and suppression of domestic civil rights. Their hope is for an awakening of a new vision of peace and justice and restoration of trust and genuine sharing globally.

YOUTHFUL GENEROSITY

After talking with their Mom, Lisa LoJacono, about how presents have become excessive at birthday parties, the Bumstead brothers — Stephen, now 9, Christian, turning 8, and Nathan, now 6 — decided to help some other children and moms have food rather than to receive toys themselves at their parties. Stephen had his party on March 7 and Christian celebrates his on Friday. On their party invitations the boys asked their friends to bring along a bag of nonperishable items for the food pantry. The boys figure they'll have 16 bags to deliver to the food pantry! Lisa says, "I'm very proud of their decision and their enthusiasm about being able to use their special occasion as a way to help others." All three of the boys should be very proud of this generous decision they have made.

COLLEGE HONORS

Gregory A. Boyne of Riverview Dr. has been named to the dean's list at UMass Lowell for the fall 2002 semester. Greg had to maintain a grade point average of at least a 3.0 with no grade lower than a B to acheive this honor.

AT THE HELM

George J. Rabstejnek was recently elected chairman of the Foundation and the Board of Directors of the Massachusetts Eye and Ear Infirmary, said F. Curtis Smith, president of the Massachusetts Eye and Ear Infirmary. A resident of Cohasset, Mass., Rabstejnek was chairman and chief executive officer of Harbridge House, Inc., and retired in 1993. He is currently chairman for the Center for Technology Commercialization. "Mr. Rabstejnek has served the Infirmary for nearly 20 years," said Smith. "His dedication to his work here has been invaluable. We are pleased that he is at the helm as chairman." Rabstejnek has been a trustee of the Infirmary since 1984 and on its board of directors since 1991. He is the former vice-chairman of the Foundation and the former chairman of the Reynolds Society, which recognizes the Infirmary's most generous benefactors, and serves on numerous committees. Rabstejnek is the founder of the Infirmary's Neural Prosthesis Center, whose research focus is on developing micro-electronics to perform neurological functions to compensate for hearing or vision loss, balance problems, and voice disorders.

REMEMBERING GIA

So many of us from the town of Cohasset and beyond, remember Gia Barresi who passed away suddenly in September of 2001. As you read this, please think about the meaning and whether you can make a donation to a scholarship fund that would have made Gia so very proud. It's the "Gia Barresi Award" that several friends and classmates of Gia's are setting up in her memory. She died suddenly in September of 2001, and she was so well loved and admired by so many people that her friends thought it would be nice to honor her memory with a scholarship to be presented to a CHS graduating senior every year.

Gia was a member of and valedictorian of the CHS class of 1983 and went on to graduate from Harvard University in 1987. Letters have been sent out to the members of the classes of 1982, 83 and 84. Many people who weren't in her class knew her from the various teams she played on (field hockey, basketball and softball) where she lettered and captained. In fact, she was such an incredible athlete that she was the first girl to play Little League in Cohasset, and several of the donations received have come from friends who were young boys when they played against her and they mention how great she was and how they didn't like having her on the opposing team because she was just so good!

Letters and checks are coming in from all over the country, and her friends say it has been so heartwarming to read the notes that come with them and to see the names of people who may have moved away from Cohasset in third grade, but still remember Gia as one of the nicest and most memorable people they have ever known.

The first award will be presented this June to a member of the Class of 2003, the 20th anniversary of Gia's graduation. While letters have been sent to members of the Classes of 1982-84, her friends would like to extend to other friends, parents, teammates and teachers the opportunity to donate to this award and remember Gia in a special way, since she truly was a very special person. If you are interested, please feel free to send a check in any amount you feel comfortable with to: The Gia Barresi Award, PO Box 5, Cohasset, MA 02025. Should you have any questions, please call Maureen Kelley McCarthy at (781) 383-9125. From their hearts, Gia's friends thank you: Maureen Buckley, Jenny Fox Markulec, Maureen Kelley McCarthy, Kristin Wilkin Rosano and Tara Pompeo

George J. Rabstejnek was recently elected chairman of the Foundation and the Board of Directors of the Massachusetts Eye and Ear Infirmary.

Hearing Loss Proven Devastating To Quality of Life
Minneapolis, MN—Not until the National Council on Aging Study was there any solid clinical data to correlate hearing loss to the occurrence of depression, dementia, anger management, continued social interaction, etc. This research now shows definitively that hearing loss affects nearly every aspect of how a person exists in his or her environment. When it is not treated, hearing loss profoundly impacts both physical and mental health. This new data has recently been published in the Journal of American Medical Association. New digital hearing technology is now making aids more comfortable and effective provided the technology is fit properly by qualified professionals. Northeast Audibel, which has been fitting hearing instruments in Massachusetts for over 36 years has recently been appointed an Authorized Center for Hearing Excellence by Audibel corporate headquarters in Minneapolis. If you would like to schedule a free, no-obligation hearing evaluation with Northeast Audibel, you can reach them at 1-866-536-HEAR (4327).

King Jewelers is a gem at Great Chefs benefit

The presence of Valerie and Victoria King at "Great Chefs 2003", A Mardi Gras Gala, was more than an evening as corporate donors to the event benefiting Partners Health Care.

Guests admired the elegantly illuminated suite of cultured pearl jewelry their business, King Jewelers, had provided as the grand prize to be won at the close of the evening during the culmination of a "Sweets and Jewels" raffle. Monies raised from this event will be used to provide services to those touched by cancer in local communities, a cause very near to the hearts of the King family.

In 1990, June King, mother of Valerie and Vicki, had been diagnosed with breast cancer. Now 13 years later, Mrs. King remains well and cancer free. On the day her daughters stood at a benefit to raise funds to fight the disease with which she had been stricken, she was healthy and strong and on her way to the warmth and sun of Florida. Although "semi-retired", she remains active in her family's business as a buyer of giftware for the store and as a stringer of pearl and bead jewelry.

Joining King Jewelers were other participating businesses from Cohasset, The Red Lion Inn and Bernard's.

Valerie and Vicki recalled their mother's ordeal with cancer as a time that a close knit family became even more so. "It was a time of uniting for all of us," reflected Valerie recently. "We are the kind of family that doesn't focus on the negative. We concentrated on treatment and family and thoughts that she would again be well.

"When Mom was ill, we would go over regularly and see that she was eating and cook healthy meals for her. She always maintained an interest in the business, but would only come into the store when she occasionally felt able, and then would leave when she was tired. She was fortunate that we had a family business and this was possible. I can only imagine how hard it is for someone not in this situation."

The Kings are the third generation in a family of jewelers. Vicki and Valerie's grandfather Forrest King, a watchmaker, founded the business in Lexington in 1921. The business eventually was moved to Scituate. In the mid fifties, their dad, Forrest King, Jr. took over the store then located on Front Street. Though the family resided in Scituate, the company next moved to Cohasset and is currently located on Route 3A in Cohasset Plaza.

Anxious to interest his daughters in the family trade, Mr. King trained them to work in the store where they spent Saturdays during their teens. One summer, he gave Valerie two showcases in the corner of the store and a budget, with which she could run her own "costume jewelry" business. "I had a ball," recalls Valerie with a smile. "And the department did very well, too!"

Eventually, sister Vicki became involved, and attended the Gemological Institute of America (GIA) where she earned her Graduate Gemologist Diploma. Today the sisters manage the business together. Vicki does all necessary appraisals of the jewelry as well as many aspects of merchandising, while Valerie handles marketing and publicity for the company. They work as a team to present a selection of items to their customers that combines unique pieces and designs with others that are classic and traditional, creating an assortment that is exceptional and timeless.

Their role in the community is a prominent one, as they are now serving a third generation of customers. As shoppers make purchases commemorating important life occasions the Kings are aware of the importance of the service they are providing. "We are a family business and we treat people as family," said Valerie.

At "Great Chefs 2003" Valerie and Vicki hosted a table of guests who were among more than 350 people who enjoyed the cuisine offered by 19 regional restaurants at this 15th annual gala for Partners Home Care. Joining King Jewelers were other participating businesses from Cohasset, The Red Lion Inn and Bernard's. Both presented stations serving specialties of their respective establishments.

Valerie and Vicki joined Kim Carrigan, WBZ TV news anchor, and celebrity emcee as she drew the number determining the winner of the "Sweets and Jewels" raffle. The lucky recipient went home with the strand of culture pearls, mabe pearl earrings and mabe pearl and diamond ring, donated by the Kings.

Valerie clasped the necklace around the neck of the winner as Vicki and Carrigan joined the audience in cheers .The gift of jewelry had raised a significant portion of the evening's proceeds which would assist those afflicted with the same disease that had stricken their mother.

The event was a successful one for Partners Home Care attracting a larger audience than ever and raising an unprecedented $40,000 for the home care agency.

Hat's off to the Health Department

This is one of those editorials that we've been meaning to write for some time but it always seemed to be pushed aside due to some other more pressing issue.

But with Town Meeting and Election Day still a few weeks down the road, a budget crisis that won't go away and 3 Jerusalem Lane before the Zoning Board next week — this is an opportune time to single out the Cohasset Health Department for a well deserved attaboy before we have to refocus on other matters.

We wonder if Cohasseters realize what an innovative, forward-thinking Board of Health and Health Department they have.

For starters Tara Mullen, who doubles as the Sewer Department secretary, sets the right tone with her pleasant, helpful manner both on the telephone and in person at the Town Hall office.

Dr. Joseph Godzik, our award-winning Health Agent, anchors the department with quiet intelligence and a wealth of knowledge about everything from septic systems to smoking regulations. He was recognized in 2001 by his peers who presented him with the Michael Saraco Award for his "vast knowledge in the field of public health and dedication, loyalty, enthusiasm, and leadership."

And Public Health Nurse Judy Fitzsimmons can write the book on community nursing. She combines warmth and caring with concern and expertise. Our elderly citizens, in particular, rightly put their trust in her judgement.

You may be thinking, "We'd expect no less of these qualified staffers." And you'd be right in a perfect world. But we know from covering other towns in the past that the type of service offered by the Cohasset Health Department isn't necessarily the norm.

We'd be remiss if we didn't praise the Board of Health, with Robin Lawrence, Peggy Chapman and chairman Steve Bobo at the helm. Mr. Bobo almost without fail contributes the column "Health Notes" every week to the Cohasset Mariner in which he tackles a range of issues, projects and programs and informs us about health board initiatives. This week, for example, the Cohasset Walking Club is featured.

In Health Notes, we've been informed how the Health Department is working on ways to prevent obesity in our youngsters, get us all exercising, rid smoking from the Town, and in conjunction with local students, is testing our waters. We've learned ways to prevent the spread of the Norwalk Virus and about the dangers of melanoma, not buckling up and drinking and driving. We've read about diabetes, the dangers of too much summer heat, and how to dispose of mercury thermometers. The useful information has run the gamut from news about influenza to safe Thanksgiving turkey handling tips.

The Board of Health through Mr. Bobo is providing these weekly columns as a volunteer effort which leaves no doubt members of the Health Department really care about the citizens of Cohasset. They have become the model for what other towns' health departments should strive to become.

There's nothing left to say, but "thank you from the bottom of our hearts."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Youth sports and violence

TO THE EDITOR:

The National Alliance for Youth Sports publishes a quarterly magazine called SportingKid. The latest issue is out and is a must read for all parents, coaches, and organizers with any involvement in youth sports. The Jan/Feb issue's cover story asks the question: Is the rash of parental violence at youth sporting events increasing, or are we just recognizing it as a problem?"

Perhaps the first reaction to reading such a question is that our community doesn't have such issues. That's what many think. Many also might wonder why of 24 accounts of violence detailed, including the top story, the death of Hockey Coach Michael Junta, there were four stories detailing occurrences in Massachusetts, as close as Weymouth and Quincy. It would be hard to explain to somebody in another state that it's not our community. One of the article's sources stated: "....for every community that's doing it right, there are 5000 that are doing it wrong." That's a lot of people not getting it, and more reason why people should "get" this magazine. Call 1-800-688-KIDS to do so. Quincy and Weymouth are close enough for us to realize that it's everybody's issue.

Backs Greenbush

TO THE EDITOR:

A train from the South Shore to Boston would be luxurious beyond belief. Avoiding bumper to bumper traffic on the South East Expressway relaxing in a comfortable seat reading your newspaper.

Hingham has delayed the construction of the railroad by hiring lawyers to fight it and demanding a tunnel under Hingham Square. These things contribute to the cost.

Winchester and Manchester by the Sea have trains that run through the middle of town and my friends who live there love the convenience of taking a train to Boston and have never mentioned noise.

I am in favor of having a train to Greenbush.

HEALTH NOTES

Walking club steps off at CHS

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Under joint sponsorship by the Board of Health and Cohasset Elder Afairs, the Cohasset Walking Club will begin its 2003 season with a tour of parts of the new Cohasset High School. On March 26 at 3 p.m., the club will meet at the north entrance of the high school (near the old gym) to inaugurate the first school walk. This first meeting will begin by a short discussion and description of the club's plans followed by a walking tour of the parts of the high school which are now open. As construction of the building is on going, the walk route will be changed to accommodate construction. Joe McElroy will be the walk leader and will have important information about health issues and appropriate walking dress, shoes, clothing and preparation such as stretching exercises. He will also have information about routes and schedules; dates and times of future walks.

For information on the Walking Club or to sign up, call Cohasset Elder Affairs at 781-383-9112, or contact the Board of Health at 781-383-4116.

Rails with Trails

In addition to the Walking Club, the board of Health is moving ahead on the Rails with Trails initiative. Three towns Cohasset, Scituate and Hingham are joining in developing a walking and bike trail which, when it is finished, will run from Greenbush to the ferry at Hingham Shipyard. The delay in start of the Greenbush line gives the three towns the opportunity to initiate a biking and walking trail over the present right of way. This project for a trail, which would be built using federal funding already earmarked for the purpose, will connect the three towns and hopefully ensure a continuing access to the right of way for the citizens of the three towns. In order to secure the federal grant, Cohasset needs to do a feasibility study for the project in Cohasset to be paid for by Community Preservation Act funding. Cost of this study will be $25,000 and the project will be managed by the Town Planner Liz Harrington.

Steve Bobo is chairman of the Cohasset Board of Health.

LIBRARY CORNER

New director comes on board

Jacqueline S. Rafferty was named the new Library Director of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library at the meeting of the Board of Selectmen on Tuesday, Feb. 25. Town Manager Mark Haddad recommended her to the Selectmen as both the unanimous choice of the Search Committee for Library Director and of the Board of Trustees of the Library. Twenty-nine applicants responded to the Search Committee's advertisements.

Rafferty has been the Library Director of the Hanson Public Library since 1996. She also has had previous varied experience in the libraries of Quincy College, Stonehill College and the Plympton Public Library. She has been Treasurer of the Southeastern Automated Information and Library System (SAILS Network) and on the Planning and Budget Committee of the Southeastern Massachusetts Library System (SEMLS). She is a graduate of Southeastern Massachusetts University and has a masters degree in Library and Information Science from the University of Rhode Island.

Sheila Evans, chairman of the Search Committee and a Library Trustee, said Rafferty "is wonderfully qualified, both personally and professionally, to maximize the beautiful new library's great potential!" The Search Committee included Town Manager Mark Haddad, Library Trustees Patience Towle, Barbara Power and June Hubbard, and Meg Bertolami and Kathy Ofsthun as community representatives. The Search Committee, after interviews with several candidates for the position, believed that Rafferty offered Cohasset an outstanding chance to acquire an extraordinarily well-qualified person for its new library director. Rafferty will assume her new position on March 31. Janet Husband, who as served Cohasset Library director since 1997, took an attractive early retirement package.

QUESTION OF THE WEEK

If it were up to you, would you pull the plug on Greenbush?

SELECTMAN/Gabriel Gomez

It is not in the best interests of Cohasset to pull the plug on the Greenbush project at this late stage. Living in a beautiful historic town, we struggle constantly to balance improving life in Cohasset with maintaining our old character and charm. Greenbush will provide commuters with a welcome alternative to the currently inadequate highway system. A weekend and evening schedule will make Boston more accessible to all residents. Both will make Cohasset more appealing to current residents and new families alike. Further, the Greenbush project will benefit Cohasset with mitigation funds earmarked for $1.75 million of critical town projects. It is our responsibility to try to limit the adverse effects of projects such as Greenbush while focusing on the benefit of the community as a whole. Cohasset is already facing fiscally challenging times — not times in which it is in our best interest to refuse substantial state funding. I propose that we are not currently prepared to find millions in our budget to replace the mitigation funds. Further, I believe voters would like to avoid an override of this magnitude.

The current focus of the Board of Selectmen should be planning for the real possibility that Governor Romney decides to cut the Greenbush project. As we know, drastic cuts have already been made to state services. The Governor is now likely to decide to postpone the project and save the state hundreds of millions of dollars. Because the voters of Cohasset will be strongly impacted if state mitigation funds do not flow, we should start now with a responsible budgeting process to prioritize the earmarked projects. By publicly discussing the contingency plan, the Board will be able to determine which of the projects voters prefer to find funding for, and which they would rather live without.

SELECTMAN/Michael Sullivan

Should we pull the plug on Greenbush? Cohasset has had several referendums regarding the question of the Greenbush restoration and the results indicated that the town was split down the middle. Any decision made about the future of the train will be welcome news for some and a disappointment for others.

From the information I have read the MBTA has not acquired full access to the right-of-way along Greenbush and is also involved in legal issues that could take an extensive amount of time to resolve. Additionally, the price of the project now exceeds $400 million, a level at which Governor Cellucci said he would not proceed with the project.

While I don't have all the information that the MBTA and Governor have to make this decision, I suspect that the Governor and his staff will do as we have done with any capital project that has come before the Board of Selectmen, undertake a thorough cost-benefit analysis to determine the project's viability and then act accordingly.

How the Governor prioritizes this project is yet to be determined. My priority on Greenbush has always been clear: to mitigate the potential impact of the train to Cohasset and its citizens in the event that the Greenbush line is restored. I have worked with many individuals in Town who have invested their time and energy on this endeavor and believe that together we have negotiated an effective agreement for the Town. I believe that these negotiations will serve to monitor this project every step of the way while protecting the interests of our community.

SELECTMAN/Roger Hill

The need for alternative transportation is very important, but when it is at the cost of our schools and local aid from the state, it should be reconsidered. The Greenbush line is not an economical solution. Another aspect that doesn't seem right was Weymouth getting $20,000,000; Hinghan $44,000,000; Scituate $10,000,000; and Cohasset only $3,000,000 . That to me was bad negotiating on our part. It's unfortunate that we weren't able to dig a little deeper into the MBTA's pocketbook, if so we probably wouldn't be in the finical squeeze we're in now . Perhaps there wouldn't be any reason for an override this year if we push for more money from the T.

The three other towns were a little better prepared for negotiations with the T, and because of that we are not getting what we deserve. Cohasset owned the right of way through our town and should have held out a little longer. By holding out it would have given us more leverage and bargaining power. There still is a lot of mitigation left to do and I feel Cohasset needs to be more aggressive in its fight to get what it deserves.

Some important problems are still not resolved as of yet and safety is top the list . We need quad gates at the street crossings, without them safety is jeopardized — especially around the center of town where the train would be in a heavily populated area and have no reason to slow down .

Mr. Romney needs to take a closer look the Greenbush line and its cost, maybe its not such a good idea after all.

Next week's question:

Which is the bigger threat to Cohasset's character — Chapter 40B or "mansionization"?

Responses to the Question of the Week should be no more than 300 words and must be received by 5 p.m., Monday. Candidates are asked to be specific and make every word count. Submissions will be cut if they exceed the word limit. (We use the word-count feature on the computer to determine the number of words.) Candidates may reply by e-mail at mford@cnc.com; by fax at 781-741-2931, or by dropping off their responses at the Cohasset Mariner office in the Hingham Journal Building, 73 South St., Hingham Square. Items may also be dropped off at Cohasset News on Brook Street. However they choose to deliver their answers, candidates should adhere to the 5 p.m. Monday deadline.

We will also publish a weekly Candidates' Corner, which will be limited to a few paragraphs (about 150 words), from any candidate who chooses to submit dates of coffees, fundraisers and the like.

The Mariner will not accept letters to the editor from candidates or letters endorsing or attacking particular candidates. The Mariner will publish letters about campaign issues from citizens not seeking election.

If you have questions, or would like to suggest a Question of the Week, call Mary Ford at 781-741-2933 or contact her by e-mail at mford@cnc.com.

New Zealand birds — a report from down under

A BIRDERS EYE VIEW

JOANNE C. NORTON

I usually write about local birds, but this month I am departing from that practice. Having just returned from 19 days in New Zealand, I am too focused on the birds of the Southern Hemisphere to write about anything else. New Zealand consists of two main islands plus a number of smaller islands with the Tasman Sea on one side and the South Pacific Ocean on the other. About 135 million years ago New Zealand separated from the Antarctic continent, before the age of mammals and reptiles. It is now roughly 3500 miles from Antarctica, 7000 miles from South America and 1000 miles from Australia. Long isolation from other landmasses had great importance in determining what flora and fauna would inhabit the country. The only land mammals that arrived in New Zealand without being introduced by humans were three species of bats, one of which is now extinct. There are no native snakes. Gradually some birds flew there on their own. With nothing to fear from mammal predation, many became flightless and began to nest on the ground.

In New Zealand there are almost 70 "endemic" species of birds, those that breed only in New Zealand. There are about 85 more self-introduced species, those that are considered "native". Migrants and human-introduced birds account for the rest. There are some 12 species of shags, or cormorants, but only one native owl, one hawk and one falcon, the falcon being an endangered species.

Ratites are flightless birds with no keel on the breastbone and include South American rheas, African ostriches and Australian emus: Moas were giant New Zealand ratites ranging from 3-12 feet high. Fossil records show that these birds did survive the Ice Age. They did not survive being hunted by the Maori and Polynesian peoples who considered Moas extremely good to eat. The kiwi is the only ratite left in New Zealand, although there are other flightless birds. The kiwi, of course, is the most famous bird in New Zealand. The people of New Zealand are also called "kiwis". The fruit is always referred to as "kiwifruit" to minimize confusion.

There are three species of kiwis in the world, all endemic to New Zealand. Kiwis, unlike most birds, have a keen sense of smell. They are the only birds to have nostrils at the end of their very long beak. This helps them find food as they dig around in the earth for earthworms, insects and grubs. They are nocturnal and have long whiskers at the base of their bill to help them find their way in the dark. They have no tail and only tiny remnants of wings. In many ways they resemble mammals more than birds. Because they cannot fly, they run around on the ground. Their feathers are thick and fur-like. They live in burrows. Their egg weighs in at 15-20 percent of the female's weight as compared with an ostrich egg that is 2 percent of the female body weight.

Albatrosses are the largest seabirds in the world, having wingspans of up to 10 or more feet. They may fly as far as 8000 miles without landing on land. They alight on the ocean to sleep and to feed, usually on squid or fish. Amazingly, this takes more energy than flying, because of the heat loss. They take advantage of updrafts and air currents to soar and glide, flapping only when necessary in turbulent air. They drink salt water, exuding the salt through special tube structures on their beaks. They breed on uninhabited islands, laying only one egg. The cycle for incubating and hatching the egg is so long that they only breed every other year. The Royal Albatross is the only albatross to breed on the mainland coast, namely on Taiaroa Head near Dunedin, New Zealand. We visited this colony, which is strictly managed to prevent predation by humans and other mammals.

New Zealand has several species of honeyeaters that have curved bills and long tongues with brush-like ends for collecting nectar from flowering plants. Honeyeaters are different from hummingbirds. They play an important role in pollination as they ingest nectar from flowering plants. The Tui is black with white throat tufts. The Saddleback is black with a brown "saddle" across its back. The Bellbird is an undistinguished looking olive green bird with a very distinguished, liquid, bell-like song. We listened to this beautiful song follow us all across Ulva Island as we hiked its trails. The Stitchbird or "Hihi" is the rarest of this group, but due to conservation efforts is making a comeback.

Penguins are another unusual group of birds found in New Zealand. There are fossils here of the largest penguin that ever lived. Now the smallest penguin, the Blue Penguin, nests in burrows or under rocks. In the same way we put up birdhouses for bluebirds, the Department of Conservation builds igloo-shaped structures from boulders to encourage this penguin. There is a colony of Yellow-eyed Penguins near Dunedin, and several other species of penguin nest on the outer islands.

The Maoris may have killed off the Moa and introduced a few animals, but the European settlers who came later did even more damage by destroying forests and introducing animals such as stoats, ferrets, possums and rats. Because birds were isolated for so long, they did not develop any defenses against these predators. There is a concerted effort now to rid New Zealand of these introduced mammals. Possum fur is extremely soft and when mixed with Merino sheep wool makes lovely garments. This is one kind of fur that is on the approved list to wear!

The Weka and the Takahe are both flightless birds in the rail family that includes coots and gallinules. Most rails are very secretive and seldom seen. The New Zealand Weka, by contrast, does not shy away from people. It can swim and has feet strong enough to kill rats and stoats. The Takahe was thought to be extinct in the 1930s, but a few were found in 1948 in the Murchison Mountains within the Fiordland National Park. Now they are protected in this area with entrance "by permit only" for research and management.

Brown Kiwi

An island called Tiri Tiri Matangi ("looking to the wind" in Maori) has been set aside as an Open Scientific Reserve. It is about 20 miles from any mainland, just enough to keep mammals from swimming across. There has been a concentrated effort to rid the island of all rats, dogs, feral cats, stoats and possums. Volunteers planted 250,000 to 300,000 native trees. Many threatened endemic and native birds were moved to Tiri Tiri to help prevent their extinction. The public can visit, but their activities are closely monitored. Increasing numbers of some species tells a story of success.

It was wonderful to see so many unusual birds, 85 species in all, but it is also nice to come home to my regular backyard visitors.

Joanne Norton is Master Bander for the New England Wildlife Center, and counts birds for Project FeederWatch, WetlandWatchers and International Shorebird Surveys.

Can't call this a war

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Sorry, George, but I just can't get a handle on this thing you call a war in Iraq and I probably won't until . . . I go into a grocery store and they tell me that hamburger will cost me seven red points and a can of grated tuna is five brown points and a 16 ounce can of pickled beets is nine blue points. They call it rationing.

Or I stop for gas and find that the A sticker I have in the lower right corner of my windshield entitles me a gallon and a half to last me a week. If I had a B or a C card I could get two and a half gallons. They call that rationing, too.

Or I hear whistles that have been placed at strategic locations signal the warning that a blackout is due...

Or I visit the Firestone store and I'm told I can't get new tires because rubber is scarce and the best is reserved for those essential workers and, beside, my whole community is eligible to get only 37 new tires, 200 retreads and 120 inner tubes for the whole month.

Or I see in the windows of houses the simple little flag with a red border and a blue star in the middle that means someone from that house is away for a while in uniform. Some have as many as six stars. If one of the stars is gold, then he won't be back.

Or if I'm a pleasure boater with my craft in Hingham Bay I'm licensed only to sail in Zone D and I have to keep my radio transmitter sealed lest I give away some crucial information to the spies that are everywhere. Remember, "a slip of the lip may sink a ship."

Or I'm thrilled to such stirring phrases as: "Send us more Japs," the last message from Wake Island; or "Praise the lord and pass the ammunition," as urged by the Rev. Howell M. Fogg, chaplain aboard the cruiser USS New Orleans at Pearl Harbor.

Or I'm required to paint the upper half of the headlights on my automobile black to comply with the "dimout" so that lights from the shore won't outline ships in coastal waters for the submarines that are lurking offshore.

Or I'm subject to occasional test blackouts when every light in the city is extinguished for 15 minutes and those who don't take it seriously can be fined $500 and jailed for a year. This has created a run on blackout curtains and blackout paints in hardware stores.

Or I hear whistles that have been placed at strategic locations signal the warning that a blackout is due — a five-second blast followed by two seconds of silence followed by a five second blast repeated for four minutes.

Or the Rose Bowl game is moved from the West Coast to Durham, N. C., lest the Japanese attack and the Army-Navy football game is played in Annapolis, Md., before a mere 12,000 people, tickets being sold only to residents who live within 10 miles of the field to conserve gasoline and rubber.

Or I hear on the radio, the hits songs of the day, "In Der Fuhrer's Face" by Spike Jones and his City Slickers; or read such books as "See Here, Private Hargrove;" or watch John Wayne defeat the enemy in such movies as "The Sands of Iwo Jima."

Then and only then, George, will I call it a war.

Renovated Homeshare apartment opens at First Parish House

First Parish announces the re-opening of its Homeshare apartment. After extensive renovations to 23 North Main St., the apartment has been newly painted, decorated, and furnished with the essentials for daily living. It will soon ready for occupancy by a family in need of temporary housing.

Interest in the homeless began at First Parish with a book and a movie. The Meeting House was used during the filming of the "Witches of Eastwick" In gratitude, Warner Brothers made a donation to First Parish, of which funds were dedicated towards an Outreach program.

At about the same time, the First Parish book group was reading Jonathon Kozol's "Rachael and Her Children," which chronicles the homeless with an intimate look into the lives of several families sheltered in New York City hotels. The group members were deeply moved and subsequently proposed to then minister, Ed Atkinson, the idea of converting under utilized space at the Parish House into a temporary home for families in transition.

The result was a coordinated effort including enthusiastic support from Ed and the Parish, donations of time and supplies from parishioners and a local electrician, money from the newly formed Outreach Fund, and inspiration and support from Dorothy Newell, founder of Homeshare Finally, a tiny apartment on the second floor of the Parish house became a reality.

In October 1989, the first occupants, a young mother and her child, moved into the apartment. Four other families called it "home" that first year. Since then, more than 20 families have been guests in the Homeshare apartment. Mothers and fathers, after a stay in the Homeshare apartment, have gone on to earn GEDs, LPN degrees, enter community college programs, or simply, yet profoundly, found affordable housing and kept their families together during a time of crisis.

As a Homeshare provider, First Parish is associated with the Weymouth-based organization, Friends of the Homeless of the South Shore. For these families in transition, Executive Director, Dorothy Newell and her staff, facilitate the process of finding temporary shelter, employment, education, permanent housing, and obtaining help from state agencies and community services. Once permanent housing is found, the furniture bank helps get the family set up with furniture, linens, dishes and more Additionally, they supervise every family in the Homeshare network, providing counseling and special education where needed.

MCAS shows urban school districts aren't keeping up

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

A recap and analysis of the week in state government.

It would have been as glorious as "Stand and Deliver," but this isn't Hollywood.

The Department of Education announced that after three rounds of testing, 90 percent of the students in Massachusetts' public schools passed the Massachusetts Comprehensive Assessment System test. Some superintendents claimed the pass rate was actually a bit higher than reported by the state. Passage is mandatory for graduation from high school, the first time that's been so in the state where free public education was invented.

Supporters of the standardized test said it was a situation just like that in the movie. If you set high standards, kids pegged for failure will rise to the occasion. The teachers' unions and other critics had said kids would drop out and flunk out in droves. A huge political backlash was predicted. Instead, the kids mostly met the new high standards. None of the doom predicted by critics of MCAS came to pass: the dropout rate fell a bit last year, and the non-graduation rate looks like it will tick upward, but not appallingly.

But the kids who turn out winners in "Stand and Deliver" are mostly urban and non-white – and in that regard, there's no Hollywood ending in sight. Though places like Somerville and Fall River did well, only 70 percent of Hispanics in the senior class passed; only 75 percent of blacks; only 79 percent of kids from urban areas overall. Lawrence's pass rate: 54 percent. Seven other cities showed similar results. The problem seemed to be not with the test; the test appeared to be quantifying the problem. This was exactly the result hoped for by William Weld, Mark Roosevelt and Tom Birmingham when they wrote the education reform law in 1993. In the old days, the kids in the problem areas were by and large handed a diploma and sent on their way; now, they can't graduate. In becoming quantifiable, educational deficiencies become undeniable, and educators become accountable.

In the old days, the kids in the problem areas were by and large handed a diploma and sent on their way; now, they can't graduate. In becoming quantifiable, educational deficiencies become undeniable, and educators become accountable.

The test also appears to quantify the extent to which Massachusetts discriminates against its minority groups. Nobody's arguing that the enormous racial disparity on the math portion — to pick the most objective part of the MCAS exam — is due to its cultural bias.

Either black kids are dumber than white kids, which they're not, or the state has an awful long way to go before equal opportunity is reality in Massachusetts. The implications are enormous, though it remains to be seen if policymakers can respond cogently with no new money available to target the problematic districts and groups.

What remained striking, and scary, is that all those kids from Lawrence and other urban areas would have gotten diplomas before MCAS. It was reminiscent of the first teacher certification tests in 1998, when 54 percent of those who took the test failed and everyone suddenly thought, with a shudder: "Hey! They all would have become teachers before the test!"

In the old days no one knew what a high school diploma from a Massachusetts school meant. For good or ill, now they do. For what it's worth, it means you can pass this standardized test, the MCAS exam. And the MCAS exam ain't easy. So it appears the state has measured up to the gigantic problem of designing and delivering statewide standards and a rigorous but manageable assessment system. Now all that remains to solve are poverty and racism, and we'll be all set.

Most of the other talk in the building was about the budget.

- House Ways and Means Chairman John Rogers said the mayors and town managers should plan for a 20 percent cut in local aid in the House budget, though the actual proposed reduction may not be that large. Romney wound up taking the odd approach of offering to stand tall with the locals, who had lambasted the administration's budget, against the evil axe-wielders of the House. Meanwhile, Administration and Finance Secretary Eric Kriss had some rare good news: February revenues were up 4 percent over 2002.
- The Globe ran a front-page story detailing claims by analysts that Massachusetts had "passed up hundreds of millions of dollars in savings adopted by some other states." Medicaid accounted for 21 percent of state budgets on average; in Massachusetts, that number has reached 28 percent.
- A gathering of activists on bilingual education said the Legislature should adopt changes in the bilingual referendum passed by voters last November. The organizers said the law should allow some more flexibility, and that teachers ought not to be liable as plaintiffs if they teach in languages other than English, as the new law stipulates they may be. Gov. Romney has signaled his opposition to suing teachers, but if he pursues that change, other proposals for amendment may be attached.
- As the Supreme Judicial Court heard arguments in a case that would require the state to recognize same-sex marriage, House Speaker Finneran said he is comfortable with proposals to make the legal definition of marriage as between a man and woman only.
- Acting Gov. Jane Swift had all but wiped out funding for the project, which was designed to work with local mayors, town managers and police chiefs to eliminate race as a factor in deciding who gets pulled over by police.
- Planning for the project is just getting under way; the state's first national forest would celebrate and preserve the beauty of the Berkshires.

COPYRIGHT, 2003. BEACON HILL ROLL CALL. ALL RIGHTS RESERVED.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local representatives' votes on two roll calls from recent sessions. There were no roll calls in the House or Senate last week.

FORCE BILLS TO HOUSE FLOOR FOR DEBATE (S 2003)

House 126-24, rejected an amendment requiring the House speaker to schedule a session to consider a bill if 40 percent of the 160 House members sign a petition requesting that the bill be discharged from a committee onto the floor for a vote. The amendment excludes certain appropriation measures and only allows the discharge of bills that have had a hearing and have been reported on by their committee. Amendment supporters said this will allow 64 members to force a bill out of a committee and noted that many proposals that have widespread support are bottled up in committee. They said the amendment would simply allow the legislation to be brought to the House floor for debate and a vote where the full House can then approve it, reject it or amend it. Amendment opponents said there are already procedures to force bills out of committee by a majority vote of the House and for some committees by the signing of a petition by a majority of House members. They argued that allowing discharge by only 64 members interferes with the committee process, allows the minority to rule and will create chaos by bringing thousands of proposals to the House floor for consideration. (A "Yea" vote is for the amendment allowing 40 percent of the members to discharge a bill onto the House floor for consideration. A "Nay" vote is against the amendment).

COMMITTEE ASSIGNMENTS (H 2003)

House 134-16, rejected an amendment requiring that each rank-and-file House member, to the greatest extent possible, be assigned to at least one of his top three choices of joint committees assignments. The amendment exempts committee chairs, vice-chairs, Ways and Means Committee members and members already appointed to the leadership. Amendment supporters said this would ensure that all rank-and-file members are assigned to at least one important and influential committee in which they are interested and would prevent the speaker from only giving good committee assignments to his favorites. Amendment opponents said the amendment is too restrictive and ties the speaker's hands. They noted the speaker is fair and spends many days developing committee assignments. (A "Yea" vote is for the amendment giving rank-and-file members at least one of their top three choices. A "Nay" vote is against the amendment).

ALSO UP ON BEACON HILL

DEFICIT REDUCTION PACKAGE (S 1949) - Gov. Romney signed into law a deficit reduction plan that he says in conjunction with his recent $343 million in budget cuts would easily close the state's estimated up to $650 million fiscal 2003 budget deficit. The package includes increased fees on many real estate transactions conducted at Registries of Deeds across the state and imposition of an additional $5 surcharge on all transactions. The measure also taps reserve funds including $12 million from a work force training fund; $2.9 million from the Clean Elections Judgment Fund; $6.5 million from a health protection fund; and $17 million from the Renewable Energy Trust Fund. Other provisions include making some retroactive changes in corporate tax laws including allowing the state to collect taxes on income and dividends from Real Estate Investment Trusts; restoring $2 million of an earlier $4 million cut by the governor for a home visiting program for at-risk newborns; and extending the statute of limitations on lawsuits arising out of contracts for the planning, design or construction of the $14 billion Big Dig project.

BUDGET HEARINGS - The House and Senate Ways and Means Committees will hold joint hearings across the state on Gov. Romney's proposed $22.9 billion fiscal 2004 state budget. Hearing dates include Friday, March 14 in Holyoke; Tuesday, March 18 in Lynn; Wednesday, March 19 in Pittsfield; Friday, March 21 in West Barnstable; Monday, March 24 in Lowell; and Friday, March 28 in Boston. Citizens interested in the hearings can obtain additional information and exact locations by calling 617-722-2990 or 617-722-1481.

HANDICAPPED PARKING (S 1301, S 1357 and S 1343) - A Public Safety Committee hearing is scheduled for the week of March 10 on several proposals related to handicapped parking. Among the bills to be considered are ones requiring cities and towns to designate temporary handicapped parking spaces when permanent spaces are temporarily unavailable due to constructio projects or events; allowing the Registry of Motor Vehicles to issue temporary handicapped plates for a three month period; and requiring some handicapped spaces to be designated for use only by handicapped persons who use wheelchairs.

BUSINESS NOTES

Edward Jones gets top listing

For the second consecutive year, the financial-services firm of Edward Jones, received the number one ranking by Fortune Magazine in its annual listing of the "100 Best companies To Work For" in America.

In naming Edward Jones to the Number 1 spot for the second consecutive year, Fortune's editors cite the firm's profit-sharing program and significant employee ownership.

"Making it to the top of the list two years in a row is quite an accomplishment of which we can all be proud," said John Flanagan of the Cohasset office.

The Fortune 100 Best Companies To Work For ranking is employee-driven, with two-thirds of the scoring based upon how randomly-selected employees respond to an anonymous survey designed to measure the quality of workplace culture. The remainder of the score is based on an in-depth analysis of company benefits and practices.

Kidder & Krupczak head into track season off of strong hoop campaign

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

They are Cohasset's version of Stockton and Malone: CHS seniors Jared Krupczak and Ian Kidder.

The quick, crafty point guard and the powerful yet versatile forward have been playing together for as long as either of them remembers. They have developed court intuition, knowing when the other is going to make a pass seconds before anyone else. They train together, they work out together, and they co-captained together.

"We compete at the same level of intensity," notes Krupczak. "We motivate each other to be better."

The two have been honing their playing skills with each other seemingly forever. One-on-one games in the driveway, coach Ron Ford's shooting clinics, basketball camps all over New England, including Hoop Mountain and Satch Sanders, recreation ball, Patriot Leagues and, of course, Cohasset High School basketball games are all on both their resumes.

All things considered, Cohasset hockey team's season a success

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

John Blake felt pretty lousy following his team's ouster from the state tourney last Tuesday night, and went to bed figuring he'd feel even worse the next day.

But a funny thing happened in those dozing hours. As is so often the case, sleep brought both healing and a broader perspective.

"You know, I woke up feeling pretty good about all we'd accomplished this season," Blake said of his rookie campaign with the Cohasset High hockey team. "Everyone was telling me when I took the job that this was a rebuilding year, and we started slow, but then we turned it around with a big win over Bourne, and we just took off after that.

"I couldn't have asked for a harder working, more committed group of players. We won the South Shore League championship in a year nobody expected us to do much of anything and made it to the second round of the state tourney. If you could have told me that's what we were going to accomplish this season, I'd have

CHS hockey star Durkin proves naysayers wrong

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Yeah, John Durkin sure showed them.

When the Cohasset High hockey star lost his linemates and fellow juniors Greg O'Connell and Rob Carpenter to prep school transfer after last winter's 19-0-1 regular season for the Skippers and a combined 123 points from this first line trio, many South Shore League coaches expressed the thought/hope that he'd be in for a rude awakening this winter.

As it turned out, they were the ones who were in for the not so pleasant realization, as Durkin finished his senior season with six more points than he had a year ago to lead the allegedly rebuilding Skippers to their second straight SSL title.

"It was a great feeling doing so much better than just about anyone expected," said Durkin, when asked about the Skippers 10-6-4 record this season, which included a 9-1-2 SSL mark. Of course, were it not for his humility, John might have just as well have been talking about himself with this remark. He certainly earned the right to

Grapplers close out on high note

Terry Baroudi takestop eight spot at New England championships

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Last weekend, the truly elite of this year's wrestling team had their go at the top competition of the Northeast, wrestling at the New England championships in Lowell, MA. The brothers Baroudi, senior Terry and sophomore Matt, both having placed top six at All-States, closed out a phenomenal season not only for themselves, but for Cohasset wrestling.

Cohasset, as a team, finished the regular season with a dual meet record of 18-3-1, the most wins by a Skipper team in history.

The team came in second at the South Sectional, with nine wrestlers placing.

At the Div. III States, six more placed top eight, as the CHS took seventh overall in the 58-team field.

Four athletes advanced to All-States, with the older and younger Baroudis taking second and sixth, respectively, to move on to New England's.

Sending two athletes to New England was a perfect end to a near perfect winter.

Terry Baroudi, at 135 pounds, wrestled a remarkable two-day tournament in what veteran coach Torin Sweeney believed to be one of the most challenging weight classes. Baroudi earned a top eight spot in New England, and actually, with his second place finish at All-States, qualified for Senior Nationals.

Questioned about the success of his captain, who took fifth at States as a junior, Sweeney is simply not surprised, noting "When you come back from placing at States, you should have a good year."

Mariner All-Scholastic girls gymnastics team

Cohasset's Bixby and Durkin named among area's elite

As is always the case with these kinds of things, the selection process with this team was not an easy one.

Several of the young women you see listed below as "Honorable Mentions" received serious consideration for All-Scholastic acknowledgement.

After consulting with area coaches, though, we do feel secure that we chose the top 11 gymnasts in Marinerland for this honor.

Meredith Bixby - Senior
All-Around - Cohasset

Meredith Bixby

This marks Meredith's third consecutive selection to the Mariner All-Scholastic team... averaged a 34.5625 in the all-around, an 8.55 on bars, 8.65 on beam, 8.9 on floor, and 8.675 on vault—all team best marks...led Coh-Nor squad to second place finish in Pilgrim Conference and an 8-2 record, with both losses coming to unbeaten Hanover...qualified in three events for the All-State individual competition, and finished fifth in vault (8.7), 10th in floor (9.0) and scored an 8.25 on the uneven bars...a six year member of the Cohasset-Norwell gymnastics team...three-time Pilgrim Conference All-Star, making it for the vault as a sophomore and for the all-around the last two years...Honor Roll student...trains year round at the Ellis School of Gymnastics in Braintree, where she also works as an instructor...a level 9 gymnast...has qualified for the upcoming State championships in USA Gymnastic competition...plans to continue her gymnastics career in college...her first collegiate choice is Ithaca...leaning toward a major in Communications...Cohasset-Norwell gymnastics coach Kara Connerty: "Meredith is a very committed year round gymnast. She plans to compete at the college level and she should do very well there. Obviously, she leaves us with a pretty big void. She's been such a consistently strong performer over the last several years."

Nancy Durkin

Nancy Durkin - Sophomore
Vault- Cohasset

This sophomore emerged in a big way to fill the huge slippers of 2002 Cohasset graduate Kristen Sheerin (who holds every singles CHS gymnastics record) as a key all-around performer for the Cohasset-Norwell squad, which finished second place in the Pilgrim Conference and with an overall record of 8-2 (the only losses coming to unbeaten Hanover)...averaged a 32.45 in all-around competition and was a PC All-Star in the vault with an 8.3125 average...also averaged an outstanding 8.5 in the floor exercise...started in gymnastics at the age of three, and has been training year round since the age of eight with former Cohasset High coach and current Hanover High coach Ruthanne Ardizzoni at Gymnast in Motion...Performs at Level 8 in USA Gymnastics...Cohasset/Norwell coach Kara Connerty: "Nancy really helped fill a huge void for us this year, and improved in just about all areas. She's very committed to gymnastics, and we'll be looking for even bigger things from her down the road."

Terry took down the New Hampshire state champion Matt Hicks of Salem, NH by scoring a 2-0 decision. The win advanced Terry to the quarters held on Friday night, where he lost a close 5-2 decision to Mark Whipple, who ended up taking fifth for the entire tournament. Terry was leading 2-0 in the third period against Whipple, but got caught in a devastating move to end it.

On Saturday morning, Terry beat the number one seed from Maine, earning another shot at the winner's bracket, and earning a spot in the top eight. The final match of the tourney was a hard-fought battle versus Wilmington's

Roman Walsh, the wrestler Terry lost to in the semi-finals of the Div. III States.

The bracket featured 22 wrestlers: the top six wrestlers from Massachusetts, as well as the top few finishers from the Vermont, Maine, New Hampshire, Connecticut and Rhode Island All-State competitions. Beating two state champions and finishing eighth was a remarkable way to close out his career.

Sophomore Matt Baroudi did not fair as well as his brother, losing his opening round match on Friday, but merely making the tourney as an underclassmen is a tremendous achievement. Also, Matt's sixth place seed from Massachusetts left him a particularly challenging opening draw at Lowell. The way the brackets were designed, Matt would have been back in the tournament if his opening round opponent had reached the semi-finals, but there was no such luck.

Four team members who placed at States will be return to next year's squad, Matt Baroudi, Littauer, Kehoe and Strazzulla. While the all-stars will be aplenty, the balance of the team will leave something to be desired by Sweeney, as he will lose a core of five excellent seniors, all of whom started, and contributed greatly.

Still, Sweeney maintains that his wrestling program is back up to the form that once made it one of the most feared programs in Massachusetts. Said Sweeney, who was named the South Section Coach of the Year: "The thing I liked the best this year is that we had a great year team-wise, and a great year with individuals. When you have that and a great team season, it really ties things together nicely."

do so.

As a junior, Durkin scored 20 goals on his own and assisted on 16 others, often cleaning up on the scoring opportunities created by the scintillating rushes and offensive acumen of O'Connell (27 goals, 32 assists) and the tireless digging of Carpenter (eight goals, 20 assists).

As a senior, however, this wiry 5-foot-9 sniper was left largely to his own devices— particularly early in the season when an injury to cousin Joe Durkin forced talented forward Matt Davis back on defense. All he did was finish with an SSL best 22 goals and 42 points.

15 of those tallies came in the season's first 10 games, many on absolutely electrifying end-to-end rushes that left a trail of dizzy defenders in his wake and ended with a well-placed salvo past a helpless netminder.

"It didn't take me long to figure out that Johnny was our go-to-guy," said first year Cohasset coach John Blake. "We based a lot of what we did around him, and it really worked out well, especially in the early going.

"I think John definitely showed that he could create his own opportunities this year. He's a talented offensive player. He's a sniper and a great skater too."

The two Durkin performances that really stand out in Blake's mind were his season opening hat trick against a sensational Scituate team in a 5-3 loss, and the Bourne game, where he netted the gamewinner on a sensational steal and break-in with 13 seconds remaining in overtime to give the Skippers their first win of the season against three losses.

"John kept us in a big game against a very talented Scituate team to open the season, and I think that got the confidence up of every member of this team," asserted Blake. "And the goal against Bourne just ignited our whole season. We showed that we could play with the best-of-the best in that game, and John really hammered that home."

"That's the thing about John," the rookie head coach added. "So many of his goals were huge, meaningful goals. He had that ability to carry us at times."

To no surprise, it didn't take all that long before John became a marked man, and that was particularly true the second time around against league opponents, with opposing coaches often paying him the ultimate respect by placing full-time shadows on him.

No problem. His assist totals picked up after this, with Davis (15 goals, 19 assists) becoming the main beneficiary.

Still, this drop in goal scoring did raise a bit of a concern for John heading in to the heavy recruiting period, which is precisely why coach Blake trumpets his star's decision to do a year of prep school before starting college.

"John has all of the tools to play for a good Division 2 or 3 college program; he just needs to add a little size and muscle, and hopefully an extra year will enable him to do that," said Blake.

This does not, in Blake's opinion, make John much different from the majority of high school hockey senior standouts, particularly those in the smaller division public schools.

"Even Division 3 (college) coaches are recommending to a lot of the players they're looking at right now to try a year of prep or juniors before college," said Blake, a former assistant at high school hockey factories Blue Hills and Thayer Academy. "It's just such a big step up from high school hockey to college hockey. Most players simply aren't ready for that."

Blake further illustrates his argument by pointing to Scituate High standouts Matt Hall and Kyle Simpson, two teammates of Durkin for the South Shore Dynamos club team who are also leaning heavily toward a year of prep school.

John Durkin

Deerfield, Berkshire, Pomfret Academy and Kimball Union are among the handful of prep schools Durkin has applied to, and the coaches from his top two college choices at this time, Stonehill and the University of Vermont, seem content with the notion of waiting an extra year for his services. At the time of this writing, John was expecting to hear back from these schools any day now.

Regardless of where he winds up, Durkin feels he will be better off for having played a year under coach Blake's defense-first system.

"Coach Blake taught me so much about positional play and defensive responsibilities," said Durkin, who is also a standout in football and lacrosse for Cohasset High. "I'm sure I'm a better hockey player now because of him."

This was something coach Blake was pleased to hear.

"It's nice to think I might have helped him out a little because I definitely think he has the ability to have a good college career," said Blake. "It's up to him now."

K&K express

"We are always in competition for everything," affirms Kidder. "We were both very focused this year."

Their skills on the court complement each other. Krupczak has developed the guard's knack for finding a target in the low-post, while Kidder has both the power and the soft-touch to finish from all angles. Kidder has demonstrated a toughness to rebound over opponents a head taller, and the selflessness to kick the ball out to the perimeter, where Krupczak hit over 50 percent of his threes this year.

The duo wrapped up their final winter wearing Skipper Blue, although their 7-13 record left them wishing they had qualified for tournament, as was their preseason goal. Yet the spring should hold something quite different.

K&K co-captain the boys track and field team as well, a squad which won back-to-back South Shore League titles in 2001 and 2002.

It is true that they push each other during the basketball season, but a true rivalry (albeit a friendly one) really heats up on the track. Krupczak and Kidder began doing sprint programs together as far back as last July to prepare themselves for the year. Returning from their 2002 trips to the track and field All-States, both have strong shots for re-qualification in a number of events, possibly even a shot at the New England competition.

While their basketball abilities contrast, their track skills are quite similar. They are both sprinters. Both are jumpers. They both have developed excellent starting technique off the blocks. They both lead by example, earning a quiet respect from their teammates and coaches.

In the running events, Kidder ousted Krupczak in the 200 meters last year, holding the team's top time by a tenth of a tick. Krupczak seems to have the edge in the 100 meters, having recorded an 11.1 his junior year (his season goal is to break 11 seconds), but Kidder refuses to believe himself inferior in the race. Krupczak ran the first leg in last year's All-State 4x100 relay while Kidder the anchor.

In the field, both athletes excel as impressively. Both could very well go undefeated in the South Shore League in their respective field events, as they were easy decisions for the '02 SSL All-Star team. Kidder has had remarkable success throwing the javelin and even more in the triple jump, last year recording a leap of over 43 feet. Krupczak, meanwhile, continues to improve his already championship-caliber long jumping talent.

The boys track team was decimated by graduation last year, and their chances at a threepeat are dicey. It is odd to say that the outlook of the team that has the number one and number two tracksters in the league is uncertain. But at least one thing is absolutely certain: neither one of them will let the other settle for being number two.

All things considered, Cohasset hockey team's season a success

taken it in a heartbeat without asking for another thing. So I'm not going to complain now."

With that said, Blake quickly changes direction to begin his evaluation of next season—which would hardly come as a surprise to anyone who knows this hard driving 28-year old bench boss.

The Skippers will lose four seniors to graduation—tri-captains John Durkin, Matt Davis and Tom Anderson, along with defenseman Mike Calorio. The three captains were also league all-stars, with Durki nand Davisd topping the team in scoring.

Durkin, the SSL scoring champ, finished the season with a team best 42 points in 22 games (22 goals, 20 assists), while Davis ended up with 34 points (15 goals, 19 assists).

"Forwards who can skate the way Matt does, and create and finish like John does don't come along too often," noted Blake. "That's 76 points from two players we're going to have to replace. That's obviously a lot we're going to have to make up."

As difficult as it might seem to believe, given the production of this dynamic duo, Anderson might actually prove the most difficult to replace. All things considered. Anderson, who completed his junior season with 34 points (21 goals, 13 assists), sacrificed personal glory this season to move back to anchor the defense, and he emerged as the unquestioned leader of this team.

"Tom might be the best leader I've ever been around in high school hockey," said Blake of the defenseman who chipped in 17 points (seven goals, 10 assists) this season. "Every player on this team looked to him to carry the load as leader. He led both on and off the ice. Whenever he startee to talk, the locker room went silent. That's the kind of respect he commanded."

But four players is still just four players. A team that finishes with a 10-6-4 record obviously had a lot more going for it than just a handful of impact individual talents.

The reasons for hope begin with juniors Mike Devine and Mike Rasmussen, both of who joined the three captains as South Shore League all-stars.

Devine, a returning Mariner All-Scholastic skater, was the other lead defenseman (along with Anderson) in the blue line pairings. He and Anderson were out there for virtually all special team situations, and, Devine, also like Anderson, provided all-star caliber play at both ends of the ice. Devine finished fourth in the team in goal-scoring with 10 to go along with seven assists.

"At the beginning of the year, I'd see Mike starting looking to carry the puck end-to-end, and I'd be yelling for him to stay back," recalled Blake with a chuckle. "Then I saw how good he was at it, and how good a sense he had for when to do it, and I just said 'yeah, go for it when you get the chance.' He made a believer out of me pretty quick. He's just a good, extremely reliable defenseman."

One of Devine's most important responsibilities next year, according to Blake, will be to take the other two returning blue line starters, sophomores Joe Durkin and Tim Pilczak, under his wing, much the way Anderson did this past season.

"Joe and Tim both have ability and did a nice job this season, but we'll need Mike to sort of step in and show them some of the little things, and to help them out when they're on the ice together," said Blake.

So the Skippers return 80 percent of their primary defensive core intact, as freshman Stefan Parnell will also be back between the pipes. The ninth grade netminder was clearly the most pleasant surprise this season for the Skippers, if not the entire South Shore League. All he did in his first year of high school hockey was post a goals against average of 2.24 (47 goals against in 21 games.)

"And with a year under his belt, Stefan should be a lot more comfortable," asserted Blake. "He did a fantastic job this season. He saw a lot of rubber this year, a lot of good competition. That can only help him down the road."

Up front, Rasmussen was arguably the Skippers hottest forward down the stretch, finishing the season with 26 points (11 goals, 15 assists). He teamed well with sophomore Ted Straughn (7-11—18) and freshman Matt O'Connell (7-10—17) to provide the Skippers with a reliable second punch to compliment the top line knockout blows of Davis, Durkin and freshman Mark Bouchard.

These four forwards provide Blake with a solid frontline nucleus that should only get stronger. Straughn and Rasmussen are blessed with both size and natural ability around the net, while O'Connell and Bouchard lack only the size necessary for becoming big-time high school talents. Ditto for freshmen Brandon Smith and Ben Libby, both of whom saw regular varsity time.

"I told Matt and Mark and Ben that they probably needed to concentrate on getting a little stronger," said Blake. "Of course, you figure natural growth will take care of some of that, but they should still be looking to help themselves out a little by lifting weights or whatever. All three of them have good hands, good skills and are good skaters. All's they need is that extra size, so they're not getting bumped off the puck quite so easily."

Junior Mark Davis, sophomore Mark Donovan and freshman Mike Martone added forward depth this year, and Blake expresses hope that these players will likewise return bigger and better next winter.

If Cohasset had had enough players to field a JV team this season, several of these players would have likely remained down a level.

""That's what a JV program is for," asserted Blake. "Going from youth hockey to varsity hockey is like a quantum leap, but that's the situation we had."

Even worse, the coach added, was having a handful of promising players rarely get on the ice at all in game situations.

Reports are that upwards of a dozen hockey players may be in next year's freshman class, which would push the total school hockey roster over 30 and make it possible to field a JV team.

"That would be great, and it's what I'm really hoping for," said Blake. "You're better programs on the South Shore have those JV feeder systems. That's where players learn the system and gain some experience and confidence."

Rocky Horror characters Brad and Janet played by Christopher Landis and Sara Spillane are surrounded by the colorful cast. The Company Theatre production is on stage March 14-April 6.

'Horror' on stage

Just take a jump to the left and a step to the right and you'll find yourself at The Company Theatre in Norwell, where The Rocky Horror Show — the live stage version of the cult film that has thrilled midnight audiences for years, makes its South Shore debut this week. The production will open March 14 with performances through April 6.

Columbia (Karen Cavallo), Phantom 5 (Christopher Smith), and Magenta (Jennifer Kenneally) join together in song.

Under the direction of Zoe Bradford and Jordie Saucerman, with musical direction by Michael Joseph, the talented cast of The Rocky Horror Show will take the stage with outrageous costumes and make-up as they bring to life all your favorite characters — Janet, Brad, Riff Raff, Columbia, Magenta, Rocky, Eddie, and ... of course, Frank N Furter. Together they will belt out such memorable songs as "Dammit Janet," "Science Fiction Double Feature," "Over At The Frankenstein Place," "Sweet Transvestite," and "The

A prescription for healthy eating

Local doc dishes out cooking tips

By Kathleen Zigmont
CORRESPONDENT

Think you might be putting a little too much butter in your Bouillabaisse or too much oil in your onion fritters? Want to know how to cook more healthy, balanced meals?

If so the doctor is in

Dr. Sarah Sciascia, a board-certified physician affiliated with South Shore Hospital, will lead "Cooking with a Doctor," a six-week evening program featuring hands-on demonstrations of how to prepare healthy meals.

"I think people are pleasantly surprised at how painless it is to cook this way. It's all about a balanced diet. Not all vegetables, not carb free. Just a program for healthy living."
Dr. Sarah Sciascia

"The class is intended to teach healthy habits that will last a lifetime," said Sciascia, who will kick off the program starting this Thursday March 13 at 7 p.m. at The Life Care Center of the South Shore in Scituate.

Sciascia said she has always had an interest in nutrition. A family physician practicing at Norwell Family Medicine, Sciascia said too many people think healthy cooking is difficult or expensive.

"I will be using inexpensive, common ingredients from the local grocery store and making meals in 30 minutes or less from start to finish. These will be easy, uncomplicated dishes, nothing exotic. There's no $10 jars of spices you use once and put back in the cabinet," she said.

The food will be prepared in front of the class, a la' Emeril, and class participants can ask questions as they go along. Afterward, they will be able to taste the results.

And while the class endeavors to teach healthy food preparation, Sciascia said it's not a diet program.

"There are no radical changes to how the food is cooked and it's not completely fat free. I use butter, I use half and half," she said. Sciascia said the classes are not about weight loss, strictly speaking.

"It's not about dieting. Crash dieting doesn't work. The crux of the matter is to eat healthy balanced meals and stick with it," she said.

Sciascia said the acid test for her is when participants tell her they have used some of the recipes for company.

"I think people are pleasantly surprised at how painless it is to cook this way," she said.

The key to eating healthy is moderation, according to Sciascia.

"It's all about a balanced diet. Not all vegetables, not carb free. Just a program for healthy living," said Sciascia..

The class will cover meals and foods participants are most interested in, whether it be breakfast, lunch or dinner.

Sciascia said there has been a lot of interest in the class and she is already planning a later spring session.

"I think there's a lot of people who want to make friends with common interests and learn new healthy habits at the same time," she said.

Classes begin Thursday, March 13, and will continue for five more Thursday evenings. Classes begin at 7 p.m. and run from 60 to 90 minutes. Cost is $40 for the six-seek session and can be pro-rated if a class is missed. The Life Care Center of the South Shore is located at 309 Driftway, Scituate. Call 781-659-1800 to register or

Plymouth welcomes Kingston Trio and Tom Paxton

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

Folksinger Tom Paxton has been making music for more than four decades. And even before him, came the Kingston Trio, who led the commercial end of the folk-music scene revival in the late 1950s/early 60s and sparked young listeners such as Paxton to make their entree into the scene as well.

Both Paxton and the Kingston Trio have toured together in package double-bills occasionally since the late 70s and the two acts will be united once again (the Trio in its current lineup of lone original member Bob Shane, plus singers/instrumentalists George Grove and Bob Halworth) when they appear in concert at Plymouth Memorial Hall Saturday (March 15) at 7:30 p.m.

Folksinger Tom Paxton

For Paxton, 65, the current spate of shows with the Trio is an always welcome chance to share the stage with a player whom he and many others saw as a musical and even mentor in folk's [illegible] heyday.

"I still remember hearing 'Tom Dooley' on the radio for the first time," said Paxton. "It was sometime in '57, and the song would become the Kingston Trio's first major hit, and I thought it was wonderful, there was simply nothing else like it on the radio at the time. Then I saw the Trio live at the University of Oklahoma where I was going to school the next year, and thought the show was just incredible. A lot of people might forget today but the Trio was almost like the Beatles back in those days. They were the biggest act on Capitol Records during the era, and were responsible for about half the income for the label."

Pan-fried fish fillets

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Fried fish fillets run the gamut from pedestrian to horrible, the coating gummy and tasteless and the fish bland and overcooked. Yet this simple dish cooks in just minutes, takes little preparation, and, when made properly, produces juicy, tender fish encased in a crisp, flavorful coating. What's not to like?

First, the fish. I tested a variety of fillets and found that only the thinnest will do for this recipe. (Thicker fillets such as cod turn out overcooked on the outside and undercooked on the inside.) The best choice turned out to be sole with flounder a distant runner-up. Flounder fillets are a bit too small (about 2 ounces) for this recipe. Sole fillets run 4 to 6 ounces.

The coating consists of three parts: a liquid such as milk or egg, breadcrumbs, and flavorings. I tested egg whites, whole egg, milk, and buttermilk. (The fillets are dipped in the liquid, coated with breadcrumbs, and then pan-fried.) The egg white version was crisp and clean, the milk was good but not quite as clean tasting, the whole egg was too rich, and the buttermilk added a tang that was unwelcome. I also determined that seasoning the fillets directly was preferable to letting the coating do all of the work.

For the breadcrumbs, I tried a flour/cornmeal coating, fresh breadcrumbs, and dry breadcrumbs all of which were fried in an olive oil/ butter combination. The flour/cornmeal was gummy and the least flavorful, the fresh breadcrumbs tasted like a bad church supper stuffing, and the dry breadcrumbs were the crunchiest. adhered well, browned nicely and contributed just the right amount of buttery breadcrumb flavor. Next, I tasted flavor additions to the breadcrumbs. I liked the addition of chopped parsley and/or chives since their flavor complements the breaded fillets. For 1 1/2 cups breadcrumbs (enough for eight fillets) I used 4 tablespoons of chopped fresh herbs. I tried dried thyme but it was overpowering so stick with fresh parsley or chives. Next, I experimented with Parmesan cheese but it simply interfered with the flavor of the fish. Lemon zest was an interesting addition but I quickly found that I needed a lot of zest to get any lemon flavor. When I added enough zest, it then turned bitter so I simply squeezed fresh lemon juice over the fillets after cooking.

Finally, I wanted to confirm the cooking technique. A combination of butter and oil was my first choice but I also tested peanut oil (too much flavor) and canola oil (flavorless and not crispy). Using the butter/olive oil combination and a 12-inch skillet, I found that 8 fillets could be cooked in three batches, 60 to 90 seconds per side. I found that I needed to add an additional tablespoon each of butter and olive oil by the third batch. For best results the heat should be medium-high. If the fish cooks at low heat the fillets become oily and soggy. At high heat the butter burns. These quick-fried fillets are great served with a salad, bread, and glass of wine.

PAN FRIED FISH FILLETS

Note that you should use store-bought dried breadcrumbs, not fresh breadcrumbs. Also, be sure to purchase unflavored crumbs since many brands also include herbs and seasonings.

1 1/2 cups dry, unflavored, store-bought breadcrumbs
1 teaspoon salt plus additional salt for seasoning the fish fillets
1/2 teaspoon freshly ground black pepper plus additional for seasoning the fish fillets
4 tablespoons flat parsley or chives or a combination of both, chopped fine
2 egg whites
8 very thin fish fillets such as sole, about 4 to 6 ounces each
3 tablespoons olive oil
3 tablespoons unsalted butter
Lemon wedges for serving

1. In a shallow bowl or pie plate add the breadcrumbs, salt, pepper, and chopped parsley/chives. Stir with a fork to combine well. Whisk the egg whites in another shallow bowl or pie plate until slightly foamy. Season the fish fillets lightly with salt and pepper. Line a baking sheet with waxed paper.

2. Heat a heavy-duty 12-inch skillet over medium high heat. One at a time dip the fish fillets first into the egg whites and then the breadcrumb mixture. For best results flip the fish a couple of times in the crumbs pressing down to adhere the coating. Set aside in a single layer on the prepared baking sheet.

3. Place two tablespoons each of olive oil and butter in the skillet. Swirl to coat the bottom of the pan. The butter will melt and foam very quickly at this point. Once the butter has stopped foaming place 3 fillets (or as many as you can fit in a single layer), in the skillet. Cook for 60 to 90 seconds or until dark golden brown. With a large spatula turn the fillets and cook on the other side until dark golden brown. Remove and place on a warm platter. Repeat with the rest of the fillets adding the additional tablespoon olive oil and butter before cooking the third batch of fillets. Serve immediately.

Serves four to six.

written and or sung his share of topical songs, outspokenly addressing the political and social issues of the day, along with the assorted love songs, reflective odes and traditional-style ballads that typically cover the folk realm. For most of those 40 years, a good topical song for Paxton is seldom more than the latest headlines away.

This is especially true in the last decade or so, since Paxton introduced what he calls his Short Shelf Life Songs into his onstage repertoire. These songs are generally short, one-or-two-verse, pointed little ditties weighing in on some current, headline-grabbing issue and worked into the singer's live sets while the issues are still relevant.

These songs have had even wider exposure since Paxton launched his Web site at www.tompaxton.com, which contains a special page for SSLS free MP3 downloads. Current features on this page include "John Ashcroft and The Spirit of Justice,'" which humorously comments on our current Attorney General and his motion to cover up the bare marble breast on the Spirit of Justice statue in the Justice Department, and "In Florida," which gleefully sends up the 2000 election Florida vote-count debacle. The singer recalled that a few years ago he had a SSLS about the Bobbitts (John Wayne and Lorena) that "was a great ice-breaker with audiences."

"Too much of the media tends to think of folksingers as a sort of bleeding-heart, tree-hugging, Granola-eating, mournful aging hippie lot."

Folksinger Tom Paxton

Paxton has never been one to hesitate about speaking his mind. At a rare and memorable 1987 performance at the Beal House in Kingston — home of the South Shore Folk Music Club — the singer opened his set with the commentary, "What I really like about playing at this club is that somehow, the media just doesn't seem to know about this place. And I sure hope the media doesn't come in and destroy the folk scene like they did the last time around."

So how does Paxton feel about the folk scene and the media these days?

"I have no fears about where the folk scene is going, it still seems pretty healthy. I hope more and more of media see this music as still alive and valid and fun. I would suggest to the media that folk music is much more broad in its application that they sometimes make it out to be. Too much of the media tends to think of folksingers as a sort of bleeding-heart, tree-hugging, Granola-eating, mournful aging hippie lot. And that's just not an accurate picture of the folksingers I know, most of whom are very entertaining, with funny songs and positive attitudes, just all-around good entertainers," Paxton said.

Paxton added that his Plymouth set will include the vintage 60s songs that people expect, such as "Can't Help But Wonder Where I'm Bound," "The Last Thing On My Mind," "Ramblin' Boy" and others, "because I owe them that," he said. But the singer also promised he'd mix in a few numbers from his latest CD, 2002's Looking For the Moon, a fine roots-folk disc on the Appleseed Recordings label.

Tom Paxton and The Kingston Trio will perform Saturday, March 15 at 7:30 p.m. at Plymouth's Memorial Hall. Tickets are available at Ticketweb.com by telephone to Ticketweb at 866-468-7619, at Loretta LaRoche & Company, 50 Court Street (Route 3A) Plymouth, or at the hall on the night of the performance.

Late winter pruning of trees and shrubs

Green thumbs up

Part 2

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

The month of March is a time of considerable anticipation, excitement, and often frustration for New England gardeners. Mother Nature usually offers a roller coaster ride of weather highs and lows. Hints of spring alternate with chilly blasts and snowy interludes, reminders of a winter season reluctant to release its grip. Just as our icy snow cover finally seemed to be dwindling away, another foot-deep layer of fluffy flakes coated our landscapes. Days later, seasonable temperatures and mild breezes erased nearly all remnants of this wintry offering. During this transitional month, signs of springtime will surely appear as multicolored crocuses push their way up through the crusty earth beckoned forth by the sun's warming rays and the spirited melodies of courting birds.

As the snow slowly melts revealing patches of bare earth, there is an irresistible urge to venture forth into the yard in search of spring. The gradual rebirth of our landscapes rekindles the spirit and awakens our creative energies. While the lingering snow cover may limit our spring cleanup, this is an ideal time to begin pruning many dormant trees and shrubs.

Pruning is the selective removal of specific plant parts for a purpose. Nearly all woody plants benefit from a routine pruning to train and revitalize their growth or to retrain those that have become overgrown to keep them in scale with their surroundings. Regular pruning improves the health of most plants by promoting air circulation and allowing light to reach the interior of an otherwise densely branched tree or shrub. Creative pruning may also enhance the beauty of many plants and may be expanded to produce artistic forms as in the case of topiary or hedges.

The timing of pruning will determine a plant's response to the process. Plants produce food reserves at season's end to help them survive the winter months and to initiate growth in spring. Reducing the number of branches and buds in late winter leaves more energy for the remaining shoots and promotes especially vigorous growth in spring. One drawback to pruning early bloomers at this time of year is the removal of some of this season's flowers that were set the previous year on what is termed "old wood", but the ultimate rewards are worth a few less blossoms. It is considerably easier to view the architecture of these deciduous woody plants while they are still dormant and to observe damaged, diseased, or crossed branches. Bring the pruned branches of early-flowering shrubs indoors to force into early bloom. If you do not wish to sacrifice those lovely blossoms, prune spring bloomers immediately after they finish flowering.

Many suckering, overgrown shrubs will benefit from a process known as renewal pruning. Forsythia, lilac, quince, Spiraea, Potentilla, Virburnum, and Weigela, are just a few of the shrubs that tend to become dense and overcrowded over time with diminishing flower production. These shrubs will look their best given an annual pruning, including lopping the oldest stems to within 1 foot of the ground. If approximately one-third of the stems is removed each year, an overgrown specimen can be completely rejuvenated over a three-year period without sacrificing the majority of flowers. Prune during late winter or immediately after flowering.

Some ornamental shrubs, especially those grown for their foliage or their colorful twigs, will produce better color and larger leaves on new growth. Red- and yellow-twigged dogwoods and purple smokebush should be drastically pruned as their leaf buds swell and may even be cut down to the ground to promote vigorous new brightly colored stems or leaves. Another candidate for this type of severe spring pruning is the snowball hydrangea, 'Annabelle', which will produce spectacular, massive, white spherical trusses beginning in July when pruned to the ground.

Trees and shrubs that flower in late June or after tend to bloom on "new wood". Late winter pruning will not reduce flowering and should stimulate vigorous new growth and greater flower production for butterfly bush (Buddleia spp.), sweet pepperbush (Clethra), Rose of Sharon (Hibiscus syriacus), blue-mist shrub (Caryopteris) and Peegee Hydrangea. Butterfly bushes, in particular, can grow to be sizeable shrubs that may become overly dense, leggy and unattractive if allowed to grow unrestrained. Cut back these vigorous shrubs to 12 to 18 inches tall or even to the ground this month. This ruthless pruning will promote glorious quantities of fragrant blooms later in the summer.

Perhaps the shrubs that generate the greatest number of inquiries about pruning and flower production are the blue and pink hydrangeas (Hydrangea macrophylla). Although these deciduous shrubs produce their spectacular blossoms later in the season, their flower buds are formed on old wood at or near the end of the branches. Substantial fall or spring pruning of the stems will eliminate a majority of the flowers. Hydrangeas require protected locations in our area to avoid desiccation of their buds during the winter months, which is often the primary cause for sporadic bloom. Moisture retentive soils are also critical for bud formation. Thin out stems of older shrubs to allow light and air to reach the interior of the plant and remove dead tips or branches as the plant begins to develop its leaves.

Regular pruning will improve the overall appearance of nearly all woody plants. Few trees and shrubs grow with perfect shapes and even when selected appropriately for their allotted space, most benefit from an occasional trim to look their best.

NOISE'S EFFECT ON LEARNING

A new study involving German school children shows that noise can have as much of a deleterious effect upon learning as it does on hearing. According to the German study, after Munich moved its airport in 1992, scores on reading and memory tests went up near the old airport and down near the new one. The students were tested before the move and one and two years later, along with two control groups of students who had similar characteristics but did not live in noisy settings. The researchers found improvement among students near the old airport in tests of reading skills and short-term and long-term memory. Near the new airport students' reading and long-term memory performance declined.

Whatever your age, occupation, or recreational pursuits, our primary goal at FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER is to help as many people as possible protect and improve their hearing. If you are concerned about protecting your hearing, we'll be glad to give you advice as to how. If you have a hearing impairment, we'll help you find the best solution to open your life to better hearing. Call us at 781-337-1144, 534 Main Street (Rte. 18), across from the Stetson Bldg. Weymouth, and arrange for a free, comprehensive hearing evaluation. We also have an office in Abington.

P.S. While the study mentioned above demonstrates that high levels of noise could interfere with learning and development, most of the damage appeared to reverse itself when the noise was removed.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 12

The Cancer moon opposes Mars at 6:29 a.m., warning you to wake up in a good mood. Allow extra time. Fortunately, this influence passes over quickly, and an alignment of Venus and Neptune takes over. All creative and artistic projects are highlighted. Go on a cooking or baking spree. Beautify your home or work area; redecorate, repaint, purchase new appliances or furniture.

THURSDAY, MARCH 13

This day begins with a 90-degree alignment of the sun and Saturn, reminding you to zero in on responsibilities you have taken on. You may have to face the facts about situations, and take action. Others may be grouchy, difficult to please. Don't make waves. The Cancer moon interacts with the Pisces sun at 4:13 p.m. and becomes inactive. Kick back, relax and unwind this evening.

FRIDAY, MARCH 14

The moon enters Leo at 5:06 a.m., generating an upbeat mood today and tomorrow. Take advantage of this break in a stormy period, and plan to get important projects off the ground. Planetary influences are particularly favorable before 8:31 p.m., when the moon and expansive Jupiter conjoin. The green light is on for new starts across the board, in your business or personal life. Put on your party hat and go for the good times this evening.

SATURDAY, MARCH 15

A Leo moon prompts you to be more lighthearted and enjoy life. Take time out for yourself, to relax and enjoy favorite pastimes and friends. The next few days will be hectic; now is the time to rest and recharge your batteries. The Leo moon aligns with Saturn at 8:24 p.m. and becomes inactive. An applying 90-degree alignment of Mercury-Pluto warns against making major decisions or signing contracts. Avoid late-night bickering; know when it's time to call it a night.

SUNDAY, MARCH 16

The moon enters Virgo at 8:52 a.m., beginning an intense full moon buildup. The full moon will culminate Tuesday morning. In addition, Mercury and the moon form stressful contacts to Pluto and Saturn today and tomorrow. Resolve to be a positive thinker. Stop blaming others; take responsibility for your life and your choices. The best way to channel this high energy is to work. If you keep your nose to the grindstone, you will be extremely productive.

MONDAY, MARCH 17

Gear up for a hectic day. Read yesterday's advice. The full moon continues to build, and the Virgo moon forms stressful contacts to Pluto, Saturn and Mercury. Mercury forms a 90-degree alignment to Saturn at 12:34 p.m. Eat light foods and avoid stimulants. Meditate for peace of mind. The plus side of current planetary patterns is that you can gain key insights, new understanding to resolve difficult situations.

TUESDAY, MARCH 18

At 5:35 a.m. the full moon culminates, when the moon and the sun oppose at 27 1/2-degrees of Virgo-Pisces. At this time the moon becomes inactive until 9:43 a.m., when it enters Libra. Mild astrological weather arrives with the Libra moon today and tomorrow. Plan to initiate new activities before 11:14 p.m., when the moon forms a harmonious contact to Jupiter. Moon-Mars and Venus-Pluto alignments set the stage for a romantic evening.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 19

Planetary action continues to rate high. Today the Libra moon forms harmonious contacts to Neptune, Pluto, Venus and Saturn. In addition, Venus, the planetary ruler of Libra, prepares to form a flowing 120-degree contact to Saturn. That means that the time is ideal for meeting people, beginning important alliances or strengthening key relationships. If you've been experiencing problems with another, work things out, clear the air and start anew. This influence also favors making important promises and commitments to others. At 10:02 p.m. the moon aligns with Saturn and becomes inactive.

THURSDAY, MARCH 20

Storm clouds move in again at 9:38 a.m., when the moon enters serious Scorpio. Pluto, the planetary ruler of Scorpio, is slowing its rate of motion and preparing for retrograde travel. The next couple of days can be very intense and challenging. Others may be temperamental and difficult to get along with. Don't rock the boat. Stay busy with work projects. The good news is that the Vernal Equinox arrives at 8:00 p.m., when the sun enters Aries.

FRIDAY, MARCH 21

A barrage of planetary activity can make for a rough day. Wake up in a good mood. Don't allow anyone or anything to throw you off course. Take on a full work agenda. You can be most productive. Influences are especially favorable for making repairs, redoing and renovating, problem-solving. You can cut through obstacles and get to the heart of a matter. Mercury enters Aries at 7:16 a.m., remaining there until April 5. Venus aligns with Saturn at 1:31 p.m., and the sun with Mercury at 6:35 p.m. The moon travels in Scorpio, active until 11:30 p.m.

'Big' house saga to resume in May

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

If the drama created by 3 Jerusalem Lane was a 10-part miniseries, the Zoning Board's public hearing on Monday would have been parts four and five put together. It was the long, drawn-out battle scene with no clear winner. The main players are still standing; the conflict is not resolved.

Tune in May 19th for the next episode.

The four-hour Zoning Board meeting resulted in no new decisions. More than 50 people packed the overflowing Selectmen's meeting room as lawyers for both sides argued why the mansion owned by Phil and Mary Anne Ayer should or shouldn't be granted a special permit. Definitions of terms in the town's bylaw such as "neighborhood" and "detrimental" were called into question. Appraisers and other experts gave professional opinions. Shortly before the clock struck 12, the zoning board tabled further debate until May 19.

The Ayers were told on Jan. 16 by the Zoning Board to stop work on their home — nearly 80 percent complete at that point — after it was determined building inspector Bob Egan erred in issuing them a building permit.

Neighbors had fought to stop construction on the property since August of 2002, but their requests were denied by Egan, who stuck to what he thought was a widely-held, longstanding interpretation of the zoning bylaws.

The neighbors then appealed the matter to the Zoning Board, which found the bylaws had been wrongly interpreted. The Ayers' lot was non-conforming.

Selectman's race open for debate

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

With the April 5 election only two weeks away, three candidates vying for a seat on the Board of Selectmen are preparing for a debate next Thursday at Town Hall.

But when it comes to the issues, trying to find differences between the candidates could prove to be difficult. They may come from different backgrounds, but incumbent Michael Sullivan and challengers Gabriel Gomez and Roger Hill are not yet butting heads on anything controversial.

Each candidate claims to have a sense of fiscal responsibility to help the town weather the state's fiscal crisis.

Each candidate claims to have a sense of fiscal responsibility to help the town weather the state's fiscal crisis. Each says he can minimize the negative effects of mansionization and Chapter 40B, the state's affordable housing law. While last week's "question of the week" in the Mariner may have revealed a difference of opinion over Greenbush, it seems too late for Selectmen to have any influence on the matter anyway.

That leaves voters choosing who they will support based largely on the past record and solid campaigning skills of the candidates. That, plus anything that might sway those still undecided during next week's debate.

Gomez said answering "pointed questions" from voters at campaign meetings has prepared him well for the debate. He said what set him apart from the other candidates was his perspective on the issues.

Affordable units possible at Pratt

Selectmen want credit for '40B'

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Selectmen Tuesday night scrutinized a plan to fund the creation of two moderate income senior housing apartments in the basement of the old Paul Pratt Memorial Library, soon to be the new home of the Historical Society.

Construction of the two apartments would be paid for out of the Community Preservation Fund at a cost of $200,000. Under the same proposal, an additional $100,000 would go towards necessary structural improvements on the building. The plan needs two-thirds approval at Town Meeting to go forward.

Rent from the apartments would offset the Historical Society's estimated $28,000 operating cost and help pay for additional maintenance to the building. But Selectmen asked society co-vice president Tom Gruber to revisit the proposal to see if the apartments could be made affordable for low-income tenants — that way, the town could get credit for the units under Chapter 40B, the state's affordable housing law.

Gruber said under the current plan, the apartments would be rented for $1,200 a month. According to Selectman Tom Callahan, the units would need to be lowered to $1,075 a month to be "affordable" by the state's low-income standards.

But making the apartments affordable would only produce $25,800 for the Historical Society, leaving the organization short of its anticipated operating budget in its new location.

Community Preservation Committee Chairman Stuart Ivimey argued it was better to do a moderate income senior housing project than no project at all. "The Community

Peace vigil held on Common

Was one of some 6,800 worldwide

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

More than 150 people Sunday night gathered outside the First Parish Meeting House on Cohasset Common as part of a worldwide peace vigil for an impending war against Iraq.

The "Global Vigil for Peace" was sponsored by Win Without War, a coalition of groups including the Sierra Club, the NAACP, Peace Action and MoveOn.org. More than 6,800 vigils took place in 141 countries across the globe. The "rolling" vigils were held between 7 and 8 p.m. in each time zone, starting in New Zealand.

The Global Vigil came on the same day that President Bush met in the Azores with leaders from England and Spain, deciding to make a final push for United Nations support of a war against Iraq. On Monday Night, Bush told the nation that U.N.-led coalition was not likely. He vowed the U.S. and its allies would invade Iraq if Saddam Hussein and his two sons did not leave the country within 48 hours.

Here in Cohasset, vigil-goers gathered in a large circle and held candles in support of a peaceful solution to the conflict. After a 10 minute period of silence, they spontaneously sang songs like "This Little Light of Mine," "This Land is Our Land" and "We Shall Overcome." The vigil lasted about 30 minutes. Residents from Cohasset, Scituate and Norwell attended.

"People go for a lot of different reasons," said Cohasset resident Chartis Tebbetts, who attended the vigil and has been a member of the South Shore Peace Forum since 1990. "Some people go because they're afraid...Some people go because they feel it's their duty

Selectmen split on ledge article

Selectmen voted 3 to 2 last night to not recommend a warrant article that would protect ledge more than eight feet tall. The Planning Board has sponsored the article, which will go before Town Meeting on March 29.

Selectmen put off voting on the article last week because Selectman Merle Brown, the tie-breaking vote, was absent. The ledge article promises to be one of the more hotly debated items on the floor of Town Meeting.

Federal disaster aid for Cohasset

The town will receive 75 percent reimbursement from the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) for costs incurred during the Feb. 17 and 18 blizzard.

The funding was authorized for cities and towns in 14 Massachusetts counties after a review of Gov. Romney's request for the aid. The money will help pay for costs of equipment, contracts and personnel overtime related to emergency measures dealing with the snow for a continuous 48-hour period to be designated by the town.

"This will help us since our snow and ice deficit is over $100,000 right now," said Town Manager Mark Haddad. "It's been a long winter."

Originally, the town's snow removal budget was set at $60,000 for this fiscal year.

Businesses get PAYT bag break

Selectmen agreed Tuesday night to lower the cost of Transfer Station "Pay As You Throw" bags for businesses that sell them.

The Recycling Committee was approached by some of those businesses, which requested they be compensated for the sale of the bags. Selectmen voted to lower the cost of 33 gallon bags from $10 to $9 and 15 gallon bags from $5 to $4.50. Businesses will keep the difference.

According to Town Manager Mark Haddad, based on last year's sales, the price change will cost the town $8,000. That cost will be partially offset by a $4,200 state grant the Recycling Committee has just received. On Tuesday night, Selectman Merle Brown publicly thanked Claire Sullivan and Mary Snow of the South Shore Recycling Committee for securing the grant. "It took a lot of work to get that," Brown said.

Wants to pursue senior housing

Representatives of K.S.S. Realty of Boston approached Selectmen Tuesday night and introduced their intention to build 55-plus senior housing in Cohasset.

The group said they were attracted to Cohasset by its need for senior housing and its senior overlay district. K.S.S. housing specialist John Sawyer said his company was looking for direction identifying available plots of land. He said. K.S.S. was willing to work with the town to develop affordable senior units as well.

"We have no interest in fighting a town," Sawyer said. "What we do have is an interest in working with a town to identify their housing needs."

K.S.S. is the third developer in recent weeks to approach a town board with intentions to build 55-plus senior housing. Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan told Town Manager Mark Haddad to refer K.S.S. to the other appropriate boards. Sullivan also suggested looking into a market study to see how much demand for senior housing there really is in Cohasset.

Absentee ballots are now available

Absentee ballots for the Annual Town Election on April 5, are now available at the Town Clerk's office. Absentee voting may be done during normal office hours until noontime on Friday, April 4, at which time the office will be closed to prepare for the election. You may vote absentee for the following reasons only:

1. Absence from the town during the hours the polls is open.
2. Physical disability.
3. Religious beliefs, which prevent voting at the polls on Election Day.

The applicant must request an absentee ballot. Applications are available in the Town Clerk's office or a written, signed request can be sent by mail, or hand delivered by the voter or any other person, The application should include the legal voting address of the voter, where the ballot is to be mailed, and the signature of the applicant.

A family member of a person qualified to vote by absentee ballot may apply on behalf of such voter. The applicant shall state his or her relationship to the absentee voter; sign the application under the pains and penalties of perjury and mail or hand deliver the application to the clerk's office. Absentee ballots must be mailed to the voter. Returned ballots should be mailed or can be delivered by an immediate member of the family to the Town Clerk's office by April 5, to be counted.

The Accu-Vote optical scan system will be used. Instructions to voters are printed on the ballot and any pen or pencil may be used. To vote, completely fill in the oval to the right of your choice. Secrecy sleeves are available at the check in tables. The ballots can be inserted into the machine face up, face down, etc. and will be read. It is the usual policy to flip the ballot over so the blank side shows as they insert it into the machine. Voters who are uncomfortable with this should use the secrecy sleeve.

If you are permanently physically disabled and cannot cast your vote at the polling place, you may file a letter from your physician with your town clerk, stating that you are permanently unable to cast your vote at the polling place because of physical disability. A completed application for an absentee ballot for you to sign and return will be mailed to you by the town clerk at least 28 days before every primary and election.

Deer Hill to keep its name

Won't be changed to W. Ripley School

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Don't order any new stationery. The Deer Hill School is going to keep its name.

The School Committee has nixed the idea of renaming the grade 4-6 elementary school the William Ripley School after the long-time superintendent, teacher and coach.

Chairman Rick Flynn said after two months of soliciting comment from the community, the consensus was to leave it alone.

"We found the name has a lot of nostalgia attached to it," Flynn said this week. "My peers who grew up in Cohasset have fond memories of the Deer Hill School."

Flynn also pointed out the high school library is named after William Ripley, whom Flynn described as a great educator. Ripley served in the Cohasset School System for 42 years, 24 of those as superintendent, retiring in 1969.

"He has a nice facility named after him."
— School Committee Chairman Rick Flynn

"He has a nice facility named after him," Flynn said.

Ed Goff of Ledgewood Drive approached the School Committee back in January about changing the name. Goff pointed out renaming a school is not unprecedented in town. He noted the former Ripley Road School at the corner of Sohier Street and Ripley Road was renamed the Joseph Osgood School after Joseph Osgood, a superintendent in the late 1800s. That name was carried over to the new Osgood School that opened in September 1998. At the time, the School Committee took the matter under advisement and asked for feedback from the community.

Along with the middle-high school, the Deer Hill School is being renovated and expanded as part of the town's $42 million school projects.

Flynn described the entire naming matter as "a good exercise."

"We learned a lot in the process," he said.

The Deer Hill School opened in September 1955, on a 15-acre tract on Deer Hill next to the then Oaks Farm on Sohier Street, according to the "Narrative History of Cohasset, Volume III."

Fire strikes Atlantic Ave. home

Joggers spot blaze

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

A two-alarm fire Friday morning at 9 Atlantic Ave. resulted in substantial damage to the home's second and third floors and is thought to have been caused by an artificial fireplace.

The fire was reported at about 5:30 a.m. by joggers who called 911 from their cell phones, Cohasset fire captain Mark Trask said. The occupants were not at home at the time. The current owner is Richard J. Madigan Jr. of Milton, who said his daughter and son-in-law were living there.

"Because of the fast response, we got in quick and we got it knocked down quick."
— Tom Finegan, senior firefighter

The fire was "knocked down," or limited to only burning coals, by 6:10 a.m., Trask said. No one was injured.

Two fire engines and one ladder truck from Cohasset responded to the scene, along with an engine from Hull and an engine and a ladder from Scituate. Hingham covered for the Cohasset Fire Department during the blaze.

Trask, who investigated the fire for three hours after it was doused, said the cause appeared to be a gas-powered "manufactured" or artificial fireplace on the second floor, which may have been tied into the heating system. He said evidence pointed to a faulty vent where the fire started.

A fire caused extensive damage to this home at 9 Atlantic Ave.

Trask said the fire caused "pretty substantial heat and smoke damage on the second and third floors." He said personal belongings, furniture and clothing on those floors had been ruined, while only light smoke and water damage was seen on the home's first floor.

Trask complimented senior firefighter Tom Finegan, who was in charge of the Cohasset fire crew that responded to the blaze. "(Tom) and his crew did a great job of getting to the fire before it extended into the structure," Trask said.

Finegan said the fire was close to being a total loss. "Because of the fast response, we got in quick and we got it knocked down quick," he said. "Another few minutes and (the home) would have been gone."

On Monday, the home still showed signs of the fire. A burned chair sat in the center of a pile of damaged belongings on the home's front lawn. Second and third floor windows were boarded up, and tracks left by emergency vehicles could still be made out on the side of the road.

It is unclear how much the damage will cost to repair. The house which was built in 1880 and underwent renovations in 2002. The property is assessed at $458,500, with the house itself assessed at $167,100, according to the Assessor's Office. Madigan said he plans to rebuild.

Town floats plan for dock fix

Ice damages pilings at Mariner's Park

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

A harsh winter has taken its toll on Mariner's Park at the Hagerty Property on Parker Avenue.

Three of the four pilings that hold the park's dock in place have been damaged by cold weather. According to Assistant Harbormaster John Muncey, ice formed and stuck to the pilings during the deep freeze in January. At some point, when the tide rose, the pilings were dislodged from the floor of the harbor.

"It happens all up and down the eastern seaboard in the winter," Muncey said, adding that the pilings had been "lassoed and tied up" until they can be removed from the water.

Vine Associates of Hingham, the engineering company contracted by the town to design a solution, has proposed a plan that would use bottom anchors instead of pilings to stabilize the dock. The plan would also connect a new 12 ft. by 16 ft. float to the dock, moving it an additional 10 to 15 feet into the channel to allow better access to small boats at low tide.

The damage may have reminded some Selectmen of the old saying, "Be careful what you wish for." In January, the Board considered changing the dock arrangement because boat owners were forced to haul their dinghies over the dock to its outside edge at low tide. Selectmen discussed moving the dock further away from shore and considered using a design that incorporated bottom anchors.

"This was going to have to happen anyway," Town Manager Mark Haddad said.

Still, because Mariner's Park was only completed in 2001, Selectmen have inquired as to whether faulty design may have been partially responsible for the damage. Haddad said he is investigating the matter but signs pointed to the ice as the primary cause.

Haddad said design for the new project cost the town $4,800 but the total cost including implementation was still unknown.

The project has been granted the necessary permits from the Conservation Commission and the Department of Environmental Management, but is still awaiting approval from the Army Corps of Engineers before it can go forward.

Haddad said the dock would be operational by Memorial Day.

Open burning season underway

Cohasset residents may obtain permits on a daily basis from through May 1, for open burning. Permits may be obtained by calling the Fire Department Dispatch, Center at 781-383-0260 between the hours of 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Permits are valid for one day only.

Burning may be conducted during periods of good atmospheric ventilation and must not cause a nuisance. Adverse weather conditions (wind and drought) will impact permit issuance. Burning hours are from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. on days permits are issued. Decisions to issue permits are made daily at 9 a.m. Persons calling for permits before that hour will be advised to call back.

Open burning permits are issued for the disposal of brush, cane, driftwood and forestry debris. Burning shall be conducted on land proximate to the place of generation. Burning shall be conducted at a distance greater than 75 feet from any dwelling. Select a safe area with no ground cover. While burning the fire must be attended until completely extinguished. Have a water hose rake and shovel nearby for fire control.

BRICK BY BRICK

Would you like to help build the new playground to be built adjacent to Our World, Children's Global Discovery Museum (next to the new Paul Pratt Memorial Library)? The play structure previously donated to the town (known to many families as the Pirate Park) was outdated and eventually removed for safety reasons. The goal is to renovate the existing area and provide a new playground that Cohasset residents, along with visitors to Our World and library, will enjoy for years to come. The estimated cost to rebuild the playground is $125,000.

One of the ways the Our World Playground Committee will raise funds for the playground is with the Brick by Brick program. Through the Brick by Brick program, your donation of $100 will be recognized with an engraved brick. Engraved bricks and pavers will be used in walkways and as accents throughout the surrounding areas of the playground. All the funds generated by the Brick by Brick program will go directly to the designing and purchasing of play structures, landscaping of the play area and on-going maintenance. To participate in the Brick by Brick program, please call Debbie Kuppens at (781) 383-6399.

SCHOLARSHIP

The Cohasset Swim and Dive Team is offering a scholarship. An applicant must be a high school senior and have been a member of the Cohasset Swim-Dive Team for five years. All portions of the application must be completed and postmarked no later than April 28.

Questions about the scholarship application process should be directed to Irene Volpe Barry, Cohasset Swim/Dive Team Scholarship Committee at 383-1605.

Applications may be picked up in the Cohasset High School Guidance Department.

COLLEGE HONORS

Stephen Mark Reynolds, class of 2003 at Connecticut College, has been named to the dean's list for the fall 2002 semester. Stephen achieved "Deans High Honors" that recognizes students who have earned a grade point average of 3.7-4.0. Congratulations Stephen on a job well done.

ON STAGE

Cohasset's Michaela Valente, left, starred as the maiden "Tinkerbel" in Newton Country Day School's recent production of the Gilbert and Sullivan operetta "Pirates of Penzance." Shown with Michaela is Cecilia Bahamon, who portrayed a police chorus member.

HIT HOME RUN!

Baseball season has started at Cohasset High School. A record number of hopeful players have signed up to tryout for the varsity team! I wonder if the new coaches have anything to do with attracting this enthusiastic group? Al Gallotta joins the staff after retiring from a successful career as head coach for Archbishop Williams and Damian D'Angelo coached at the varsity level in Connecticut. Both are passionate about rebuilding the baseball program at CHS. However, they are going to need a little help.

The newly formed Diamond Club is seeking contributions to pay for equipment the coaches think is essential. Contributions can be sent to: The Diamond Club, PO Box 63, Cohasset, MA 02025. If you send $100, you hit a Home-Run! $75 gets you to third base, $50 lands you on second, and $25 dollars gives you a single and safety at first base. Let's score! If you would like to join the Diamond Club, get in touch with Chris Straughn, Mark and Lynn DeGiacomo or Al and Linda Snowdale.

EARLY ACCEPTANCE

Kimberly Maxwell Ulmer, CHS '03, has been accepted early to Williams, the second oldest college in Massachusetts and one of the top-ranked schools in the nation, a so-called "Little Ivy". Buttonwood for Kids in Hingham to close

Cohasset store to remain open

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

Betsey Detwiler looks out the window of Buttonwood for Kids in Hingham. The Hingham Buttonwood is closing at the end of April, and will be consolidated with the Cohasset store.

Like so many Hingham Square shops, Buttonwood for Kids fills a niche in the downtown shopping area. Housed in a Victorian building but filled with the latest toys and books for the younger set – the store has a delightful mix of coziness and a large enough inventory to appeal to shoppers, who, often with little ones in tow, are looking for the right gift.

Shop owner Betsey Detwiler hopes her clientele will make the trek down Route 3A to the Hingham store's predecessor — Buttonwood Books and Toys at Shaw's Plaza in Cohasset — after she closes the Hingham shop at the end of April.

Detwiler said the decision to close Buttonwood for Kids after 10 years in business wasn't an easy one. But at 70, the energetic grandmother of eight wants to be able to squirrel away a little more time for home, family and her myriad other activities.

"The decision was made in part to make life easier," the Norwell resident says.

With a new Web site and the growth of shopping on-line, Detwiler thinks it's an opportune time to consolidate in the one location. The Cohasset store is a full service bookstore for adults and children; and Detwiler notes that many of her customers shop at both stores.

"But this has been a super little place," Detwiler said during an interview at the Hingham store Monday. "The Square has a special character."

Detwiler opened the Cohasset store with her daughter-in-law Kathy Detwiler in 1989. The decision to expand to Hingham in 1993 with a shop concentrating on toys was partly based on plans that Kathy would run the new store. [However, after baby number two, Kathy opted to be a full-time mother, recalls Detwiler, a decision that she wholeheartedly supports.]

So after "10 wonderful years" Detwiler, who's been described as the "energizer bunny" by her employees, is ready to kick back just a bit.

The former teacher, who taught at Thayer Academy in Braintree before "retiring" to the book business, has no plans to close the Cohasset store. She loves the business too much and will continue to host author events.

"I really love it," Detwiler says. "There are always new books and new authors to meet."

She describes her staff as family, and employs a full-time manager and 16 part-timers at the Hingham store. But unfortunately the Cohasset shop will not be able to absorb those jobs.

Although she'll miss the shop and the customers, long-time manager Linda Gardner is ready for a change. Gardner has managed the Hingham location for four years, and worked at the Cohasset store for nine years before that.

"I'm going to take a break and see what comes," she says.

Gardner says the staff, whose children are grown for the most part, have the right kind of patience to handle mothers with their youngsters.

"We know how fast it all goes by," she says about how quickly children grow up.

Detwiler says the uncertain economy also played a role in her decision but she hopes people will continue to support the local shops.

"I feel strongly that people should support local businesses that hire locally and spend locally," she says.

Buttonwood is not selling the building at 28 South St., which houses about six tenants, and plans to lease the Buttonwood space. There has been some interest, Detwiler says.

She says Buttonwood's ties to Hingham will remain strong.

"We plan to continue to support Hingham schools and organizations," Detwiler says about donations to PTOs and other groups.

Jerusalem Lane saga to resume in May

the board said, so they should have applied for a special permit, unless they had planned to stick within the exterior dimensions of the pre-existing home, a 2,000 square foot ranch.

The Ayers' lawyer, Roberta Sawyer, began Monday night by retelling the story of how the Ayers came to purchase the 3 Jerusalem Lane after securing a building permit. She said before Egan denied the neighbors' request to stop work on the new home, she met with Egan, Town Counsel Rick Hucksam and Mr. Ayer. "We went through all the issues...We went through all of the case law," she said.

Sawyer said she still maintained that the Ayers' home did not need relief under the zoning bylaws. But Zoning Board Chairman Woody Chittick wanted reasons why the property should be granted a special permit. He asked Sawyer if she wished to withdraw her application.

Sawyer said she did not, adding: "It's critical that this board hear the story from start to finish." She then claimed that the zoning bylaw in question had been changed in 1987 to specifically allow for the building inspector to issue permits in cases like 3 Jerusalem Lane.

"This board has been aware of the historical interpretation and application of this bylaw for 16 years," she said. "Conforming work on a non-conforming lot does not need zoning relief."

But Zoning Board member Ben Lacy didn't see it quite like Sawyer. "The argument you're making is that if a court has been wrong, it can't change from being wrong," he said.

Chittick then gave Sawyer an ultimatum. "You're wasting our time. If you want to go on, go on, but I'm not going to pay attention," he said. "You're either going to deal with 8.7.B (the special permit bylaw), or frankly I'm going to close the hearing."

Sawyer turned the meeting over to her new co-counsel, Martin Healy, an expert on real estate law. Healy said that the special permit bylaw did not apply to 3 Jerusalem Lane because it required an increase in the "nonconforming nature of the structure," not the lot. "There is no non-conforming nature of what's been built," Healy said, because the structure keeps to all the height and setback requirements.

Healy also said if the board felt the bylaw did apply, it should not use esthetic qualities to determine if the house was "substantially more detrimental to the neighborhood." "You can't make a judgement based on those types of reactions," he said. "You're measuring stick is the bylaw...I think it would be an error to address subjective criteria."

Healy said the town's version of the special permit bylaw essentially oversteps the limits of Chapter 40 A, the state law with which it must comply. He said the state's version of the law dealt with the use of the land being substantially more detrimental. "These are just people that are going to live in a big house and that's not substantially more detrimental," he said.

Sawyer then showed the Ayer's home was average size for its "neighborhood," which she defined as being 84 properties along the stretch of Cohasset's waterfront known as the "Gold Coast." She said 55 of those homes were on nonconforming lots. She said 3 Jerusalem Lane's gross square footage of about 7000 square feet and its footprint of about 3000 square feet was average for the group of homes she looked at.

Sawyer called on David Bond of Bond Appraisers in Hanover, who told the Zoning Board that neighboring homes would appreciate in value as a result of the Ayers' home. "It's just a normal trend that as neighboring houses get more valuable in the neighborhood, other houses tend to rise with them," he said.

But members of the Zoning Board wanted to know if neighboring homes with an blocked view of the ocean would be impacted negatively.

"They may be impacted a little," said Bond. "Not a lot."

Sawyer then called Deborah Haskell of Winthrop Real Estate Advisors. Haskell said she had conducted an impact study of a case where one home in a group of older homes was expanded. She said the unit prices increased at the average rate despite the construction.

After the board asked questions to Sawyer and Healy, lawyer Mark DeGiacomo took up the neighbors' case. DeGiacomo countered an earlier point of Healy's, citing case law that said increasing the size of the structure did increase the "nonconforming nature of the lot."

He pointed to more case law that showed a neighborhood should be defined as the "immediate environs" or "immediate vicinity." "We have a very well defined neighborhood here, and it is only the seven homes on Jerusalem Lane," he said.

DeGiacomo pointed to further case law that said the Zoning Board can take into account the financial impact of blocked "views and vistas" in determining detrimentality.

DeGiacomo called on civil engineer John Chessia of Coler and Colantonio, who speculated that the height of 3 Jerusalem Lane was just over 35 feet or 39 feet, depending on how you calculated it. Either way, he said, it was higher than the 35 foot limit allowed in the bylaw.

Chessia also said the property was dangerously close to being over the allowed 30 percent lot coverage. He said plans indicated the property was at 30 percent coverage but that without including a driveway and front steps. According to Chessia, the plans don't provide dimensions for a concrete pool and also incorrectly reflect the width of fake rock material around the edges of the property. He also said a concrete wall on the property infringes into the Jerusalem Lane right of way by seven feet.

"There's nothing to show you what's supposed to be the finished product and that's been a complaint of the neighbors throughout the process," said Chessia.

Chessia said how the home would deal with wastewater was still under question, too. Initial plans to have an alternative septic system had been abandoned, and Sawyer said the home would not use a tight tank but instead revert to a traditional system but still needed to go before the Board of Health.

"This thing, like I said, was a moving target," said Chessia. "Very difficult to keep track of what was going on."

By the time neighbors made their personal cases to the Zoning Board, it was so late that DeGiacomo encouraged them to be brief. Residents from four of the six neighboring houses were at the meeting.

Helen Hooper of 4 Jerusalem Lane read from a letter that her husband, James, who is legally blind sent to the Zoning Board in January.

"I think that the town got it wrong in this instance, and I think the town should find a way to make it right," Hooper said. "I believe that this is primarily the responsibility of your august board and I trust that you will soon find an appropriate solution."

Steve Jacobs of 15 Jerusalem Lane, originally from England, said the Ayer's home was out of place. "You wouldn't take Buckingham Palace and put it in the financial district," he said. "By putting a large structure into a neighborhood it doesn't belong in, it impacts the neighborhood."

Steve Elliot, an appraiser hired by the neighbors, said there was no doubt that the Ayer's home had negative impacted the value of neighboring homes. He said Cohasset's Board of Assessors had increased properties at 1 and 12 Jerusalem Lane by 17 and 22 percent between fiscal years 2002 and 2003 because those properties' views are not impacted. The remaining properties, he said, had not been increased in value at all, probably because of construction at 3 Jerusalem Lane.

DeGiacomo then told the Zoning Board that the neighbors would like the board to deny a special permit and enforce a stop work order on the building. He said the ultimate goal would be to have the home torn down and returned to a state that would not be detrimental to the neighborhood. "The applicant is obviously going to appeal. This is all going to end up in court someday," he said.

After agreeing to continue the public hearing in May, the Zoning Board turned to Sawyer's request to have homes that were built under similar circumstances to 3 Jerusalem Lane apply for special permits as well.

The Zoning Board asked Sawyer why her client was an aggrieved party in relation to those homes. "You are granting them property rights that you are not granting my client," she said.

But Chittick did not agree. "Aren't you arguing a general civil interest more than a private interest?" he asked.

The Zoning Board did not decide on the matter, however, deciding to review documents submitted by Sawyer first. The case will be carried over until May as well.

to speak their mind...I think people go to show solidarity with an idea they agree with."

Others, Tebbetts said, went to the vigil to "maintain a spiritual integrity."

The vigil was organized by Scituate resident Maxwell Pounder, a parishioner at First Parish Meeting House. Pounder decided to hold the vigil after he was made aware of the world-wide movement last week through an email from MoveOn.org.

"One of my purposes in doing this is that the world, since the Cold War ended, is trying to find a way to deal with these things in a better way."
— Max Pounder, organizer

"One of my purposes in doing this is that the world, since the Cold War ended, is trying to find a way to deal with these things in a better way," Pounder said. "I'm not a pacifist. I think there are times you need to use military force. I just think we can find a better way to do things.

"If there is a united world that says we should be a part of (a war against Iraq), then I agree. But I don't think we've gone far enough in trying to secure peaceful means of disarming Saddam Hussein."

Other local vigils took place Sunday night in Plymouth, Marshfield, Hingham, Hull and throughout the Greater Boston area.

Pounder said he was not yet sure of any other planned events in support of peace. "I don't know where it goes from here," he said. "I wouldn't be surprised if there continued to be some sort of a vigil. Whether there's other spontaneous protests that break out in Boston or around here I don't know."

Tebbetts said the South Shore Peace Forum holds weekly vigils Tuesday from 11:30 a.m. to 12 p.m. and Saturday from 11 a.m. to 12 p.m. in front of the Hingham Post Office at 121 North St. Next week will be the one year anniversary of the vigils, which began as means of praying for U.S. soldiers and Afghan citizens killed in Afghanistan.

Affordable units could be possible at the Pratt building

Preservation Act is 40B blind," he said. "There's a need for senior housing at all levels of the economic ladder. This would meet the need in the middle."

Selectmen, however, felt that the Historical Society might be able to rearrange its budget to allow the apartments to be affordable and still fund its operating costs.

"What we're saying is, 'If we're that close to it (being affordable), why not get credit for it?,'" said Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan. "If we can accomplish both objectives, why not?"

Gruber will bring the recommendations back to the Historical Society for discussion. Selectmen will then vote on whether to recommend the article to Town Meeting at their meeting next week.

According to Selectman Tom Callahan, the units would need to be lowered to $1,075 a month to be "affordable" by the state's low-income standards.

The proposal from the Historical Society was one of three proposals that Selectmen heard Tuesday night for funding from the Community Preservation Act.

- The board voted unanimously to recommend $25,000 from the fund go toward conducting a feasibility study of a pedestrian and bike trail along the Cohasset stretch of the Greenbush Line.
- Selectmen also voted to recommend that $36,000 go toward a $100,000 project to renovate a building on the Hagerty Property. The building would house computer and science labs for the Cohasset Center for Student Coastal Research, six art studios to be rented by the South Shore Art Center and two public bathrooms that would be accessible from Mariner's Park.

EDITORIAL

'What man has made of man'

This editorial started out about potholes and the headaches they are giving us as we rush to wherever we are headed. But somehow, worrying about potholes on our streets and potential front-end misalignment of our motor vehicles just doesn't seem all that important this week.

Even the state's budget problems are taking a back seat to the news of war in Iraq and nuclear worries in North Korea. And then to top it off a mysterious flu dubbed SARS (Severe Acute Respiratory Syndrome) is making its way around the globe. It's all enough to make you want to lock your doors, close the shutters and shut out the world.

But if we did that, we'd miss something wonderful — the onset of Spring in our beautiful town.

Almost like magic this week, temperatures rose into the 50s and 60s, our jackets came off, and the huge snowdrifts either disappeared or were reduced to a small piles of wet sand.

The sounds of birds chirping fills the air with a wonderful concert of happy tunes. Our feathered friends always seem to know when to return and lift our spirits.

Our gardens are wet and muddy now but will soon yield colorful flowers. Can the sound of lawnmowers and smell of cut grass can't be far behind?

We know we're not completely out of the grip of Old Man Winter yet. A few years back, he whacked us with an April Fool's Day storm that no one thought was funny. But with the daylight hours growing, we can rest assured that any more snow will melt away as quickly as it arrives.

This winter has toughened us up. We've gotten off easy the past few years with little snow and few days below freezing.

Like those easy winters — for most of the '90s with a booming economy and soaring stock market, we were lulled into believing good times could last forever.

We were due for a correction, to coin a Wall Street phrase. It was time for a "wake-up call." Only then, after a winter like this one, can we really appreciate Spring and the hope it brings.

It's time for all of us to take a walk on the beach, look out at great Atlantic – and take a deep breath. We all need a break, time to try and put things in perspective.

Things could be worse. Times have been bad before. This is not the Great Depression; and the international discord today is not on the scale of the World Wars of the last century.

Individually and collectively, we need to keep going. However, after this "winter of discontent," we've earned a beautiful Spring and the feelings of rebirth and fresh start it symbolizes.

The following verse by William Wordsworth could have been written today:

Lines Written in Early Spring

by William Wordsworth

I HEARD a thousand blended notes,
While in a grove I sate reclined,
In that sweet mood when pleasant thoughts
Bring sad thoughts to the mind.

To her fair works did Nature link
The human soul that through me ran;
And much it grieved my heart to think
What man has made of man.

Through primrose tufts, in that green bower,
The periwinkle trailed its wreaths;
And 'tis my faith that every flower
Enjoys the air it breathes.

The birds around me hopped and played,
Their thoughts I cannot measure:—
But the least motion which they made
It seemed a thrill of pleasure.

The budding twigs spread out their fan,
To catch the breezy air;
And I must think, do all I can,
That there was pleasure there.

If this belief from heaven be sent,
If such be Nature's holy plan,
Have I not reason to lament
What man has made of man?

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

'Nuclear nonsense'

TO THE EDITOR:

There may be an article on the Cohasset town meeting warrant asking for a vote in support of removing the Pilgrim nuclear power plant spent fuel rods from their storage pool, and storing them in above ground dry casks. The impetus for the article comes from the claque of anti-nuclear activists who now cloak their activities under the guise of protecting us from terrorists. Although the Nuclear Regulatory Commission makes its rulings on the basis of technical, rather than political considerations, nevertheless we should avoid voting (even token voting) against the long-term public interest. Voters will be expected to believe that the probability and potential hazard of a terrorist attack on the well-secured spent fuel pool justifies the risks introduced by unnecessary extra handling of spent fuel elements into above-ground dry casks!

Although the world's demand for energy (and the increasing demand in developing nations), and the limitations of conservation and of renewable energy and fossil fuels, guarantee that nuclear energy will be an increasingly important source of energy, the campaign to subvert it marches on. Part of that campaign is to block the completion of the permanent nuclear waste storage facility at Yucca Mountain, and a sub set of that campaign is to get existing spent fuel moved from storage pools into dry storage casks. Then it can be argued that this type of storage can be used indefinitely so that there is no need to proceed with Yucca Mountain.. Then, of course, it will be argued that there is too much spent fuel stored at power plant sites.

Town meeting, or any political process, is an ineffective way to address a complex technical issue. Nevertheless, if we are to make any statement through the political process, it should be rational and in the long-term public interest. We should avoid being suckered into supporting the dry cask red herring, and instead come up with a statement urging timely completion for permanent nuclear fuel storage facilities at Yucca Mountain.. Congress has exhibited a woeful lack of leadership for decades on this issue, and the nation is ill served by providing further excuse for dithering.

The treatment of nuclear waste isn't much of a technical problem, and the solutions are well understood. But it has become an intractable political problem. Let us not join the campaign to keep it intractable.

HEALTH NOTES

Be on the lookout for Lyme ticks

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Believe it or not, the season is nearing when we will begin worrying about bugs. One bug which is becoming more notorious and pervasive every year is the Lyme tick. More properly called the Deer tick. On March 26, at 7:30 p.m. in the Selectmen's office at Town Hall, Linda Hilliard, RN,CRNA and Fredric Cantor, DVM, MPH, the state Public Health Veterinarian will give a talk about Lyme Disease to educate citizens about this and other tick borne illness, its prevention, causes, and information on available treatments as well as the establishment of support groups for those diagnosed with Lyme disease, their families and the community.

Lyme disease was named in 1977 when arthritis was observed in a cluster of children in and around Lyme, Connecticut. Other clinical symptoms and environmental conditions suggested that this was an infectious disease probably transmitted by an arthropod. Further investigation revealed that Lyme disease is caused by the bacterium, Borrelia burgdorferi. These bacteria are transmitted to humans by the bite of infected deer ticks and cause more than 16,000 infections in the United States each year.

Lyme disease was named in 1977 when arthritis was observed in a cluster of children in and around Lyme, Connecticut.

Vector: Black-legged ticks (Ixodes scapularis) are responsible for transmitting Lyme disease bacteria to humans in the northeastern and north-central United States. On the Pacific Coast, the bacteria are transmitted to humans by the western black-legged tick (Ixodes pacificus). Ixodes ticks are much smaller than common dog and cattle ticks. In their larval and nymphal stages, they are no bigger than a pinhead. Ticks feed by inserting their mouths into the skin of a host and slowly take in blood. Ixodes ticks are most likely to transmit infection after feeding for two or more days.

Risk: In the United States: In 2002 there were more than1000 cases of Lyme disease in Massachusetts. This rate was over four times the national average (27 cases per 100,000 residents vs. 6 cases per 100,000 residents.) About 90 percent of all cases in the country come from Connecticuit, Delaware, Maryland, Massachusetts, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania and Wisconsin.

Individuals who live or work in residential areas surrounded by tick-infested woods or overgrown brush are at risk of getting Lyme disease. Persons who work or play in their yard, participate in recreational activities away from home such as hiking, camping, fishing and hunting, or engage in outdoor occupations, such as landscaping, brush clearing, forestry, and wildlife and parks management in endemic areas may also be at risk of getting Lyme disease. If you find a tick attached to your skin, be calm and remove it with a fine point tweezer gripping the tick as close to the skin as possible and pulling it straight out with steady pressure.

QUESTION OF THE WEEK

Which is the bigger threat to Cohasset's character — Chapter 40B or "mansionization"?

SELECTMAN/Michael Sullivan

The issues presented in this week's question are difficult ones. Chapter 40B and mansionization are two very different issues facing the Town.

On the question of Chapter 40B, I support its underlining philosophy to provide affordable housing but feel the implementation scheme it mandates is inadequate in protecting our town. Currently the law strips the local community from the decision making process. What it should provide for is joint local and state oversight of affordable housing developments. At last year's Town Meeting I supported the motion calling on the state to enact a three-year moratorium on the provisions of 40B. This sent a clear message to our state officials that local communities wanted to be heard on this issue. Concerning present applications before the ZBA, I have supported funding for legal and technical experts needed to wade through the difficult standards that are presented Cohasset by the law. It is important that we protect the interests of our community.

Mansionization is not a new issue in Town. Large homes have been built in town for many years. The management of our town, the quality of our schools along with the aesthetics of the community together make Cohasset a very desirable town. During the 90s investors and homeowners demolished existing homes to rebuild more desirable homes and significant expansion of homes also became popular. In some circumstances these changes created significant controversy.

This issue is a difficult balance between the right of ownership and the management of land use. I believe that we can revisit the zoning bylaws to ensure that they provide the proper balance.

SELECTMAN/Roger Hill

Both mansionization and the continued use of state law Chapter 40B pose serious threats to the maintenance of the high quality community we have in Cohasset.

As a Selectman, I will strongly support the work of the Planning Board, the Growth and Development Committee, and citizens groups to control mansionization. We need to change our zoning bylaws. We need to better enforce the bylaws on the books. I don't want to see another area of town go through what the neighbors around 3 Jerusalem Lane have experienced. Uncontrolled expansion of home size threatens the investment we homeowners have in our property. Clearly, we need selectmen who will better supervise enforcement, through the town manager and building inspector, to protect all of our properties.

With the clout of the state behind developers' use of Chapter 40B, we need to work even harder on local solutions. The proposed Avalon Bay apartment complex is a disaster for Cohasset waiting to happen. The town, especially our schools, simply can't swallow the impact of 200 apartment units at once. Even if impacts on town services were minimal, the site is just not acceptable — not for fire fighting, not for walking or driving safety accessing Route 3A, not for its forced loss of tax paying commercial property, and clearly not for its placement in the watershed of our drinking water at Lily Pond.

As a Selectman, I will strongly support the stance of the Planning Board and Water Commission, and outright oppose Avalon. I feel there has been no opposition from our current selectmen — all too often we have heard just the opposite. Avalon will not solve our housing problems. The answer to the threat of 40B is to build affordable units in situations where Cohasset controls our own destiny and development choices.

SELECTMAN/Gabriel Gomez

With responsible leadership, the Board of Selectmen can limit the negative impact of both 40B and mansionization to ensure that neither is a long-term threat to Cohasset. While both currently jeopardize the character and charm of our town, Cohasset's leaders may limit their effects through sensible town legislation. The Board of Selectmen's priority should be to develop its own master plan for affordable housing satisfactory to both 40B state requirements and Cohasset and to ensure that mansionization is restricted within boundaries satisfactory to voters.

Because 40B provides flexibility for Cohasset to encourage the type of affordable housing that best suits our town, with the proper leadership 40B should not be a significant threat. As a state program, 40B is currently an inevitable part of life in Massachusetts. However, the state has charged towns with the responsibility of integrating affordable housing. The Board of Selectmen's focus should be to develop its own plan for affordable housing that encourages alternatives to massive construction projects, as these are neither the only nor the best means to satisfy 40B requirements. For example, senior overlay projects enable long-time town residents to stay in Cohasset without creating an undue burden on town services.

Town leaders may also ensure that mansionization does not threaten Cohasset's charm or disrupt its neighborhoods. The Board of Selectmen should focus on hearing voter wishes for new build and expansion guidelines to limit mansionization. This legislation should receive full public hearing to ensure that the character of Cohasset is protected without excessive restrictions on the rights of residents to build on their property.

While issues such as 40B and mansionization currently threaten the character and charm of Cohasset, this need not be the case; with responsible leadership and sensible legislation, town officials may mitigate the impact of both.

Next week's question:

Should Cohasset resign itself to the eventuality of a new Logan runway and more flights overhead?

Responses to the Question of the Week should be no more than 300 words and must be received by 5 p.m., Monday. Candidates are asked to be specific and make every word count. Submissions will be cut if they exceed the word limit. (We use the word-count feature on the computer to determine the number of words.) Candidates may reply by e-mail at mford@cnc.com; by fax at 781-741-2931, or by dropping off their responses at the Cohasset Mariner office in the Hingham Journal Building, 73 South St., Hingham Square. Items may also be dropped off at Cohasset News on Brook Street. However they choose to deliver their answers, candidates should adhere to the 5 p.m. Monday deadline.

We will also publish a weekly Candidates' Corner, which will be limited to a few paragraphs (about 150 words), from any candidate who chooses to submit dates of coffees, fundraisers and the like.

The Mariner will not accept letters to the editor from candidates or letters endorsing or attacking particular candidates. The Mariner will publish letters about campaign issues from citizens not seeking election.

If you have questions, or would like to suggest a Question of the Week, call Mary Ford at 781-741-2933 or contact her by e-mail at mford@cnc.com.

Agitating a bag of wind

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

Back in the days when college sports was played by real students, a group of undergraduates from Cornell petitioned the university to let them travel to Michigan to play a game of this new-fangled football.

The president gave them a resounding "no," adding "I shall not permit young men to travel 500 miles to agitate a bag of wind."

Then it was discovered that the public was not only willing but eager to pay money to watch that bag of wind being agitated by young men who traveled many times that distance to do it.

And the university could keep all the money, except for a comparative pittance paid to the coaches, and the athletes didn't even have to show up for classes and half of them didn't stick around for graduation.

It didn't matter because the athletes played for free and the announcers on TV called them "student-athletes" even though the last time they saw the inside of a classroom was when they took a wrong turn in the corridor on registration day.

The whole thing reached critical mass the other day when three major colleges called off their basketball (another bag of wind to be agitated) seasons...

The whole thing reached critical mass the other day when three major colleges called off their basketball (another bag of wind to be agitated) seasons just as they were getting to the most interesting and lucrative part of the schedule, the tournaments.

Georgia fired Assistant Coach Jim Harrick Jr., who also taught a course called "basketball coaching philosophy," and suspended Head Coach Jim Harrick, his father, for academic fraud. We used to call it "basket weaving."

The academic types in the Georgia front office didn't describe the fraud in detail but Athletic Director Vince Dooley did say that all 31 students in Harrick Jr.'s class, including 10 members of the team, got straight As on their report cards.

At the same time, Fresno State, a basketball power on the West Coast once coached by Jerry Tarkenian, whose nickname was "the Shark," announced that it was taking itself out of the post-season tournaments amid charges of academic fraud.

And St. Bonaventure, a school in upstate New York that is best described as a basketball court with laboratory and library attached, not only cancelled the last two game of the season but lost its president, Robert Wickenheiser, who resigned.

Incidentally, the best known graduate of St. Bonaventure is 6-foot-11 Bob Lanier, whose size 18 (or was it 16) kept the shoemakers of St. Bonaventure (the town) busy at the custom last for the duration of his college career.

But I digress . . .

College basketball has been through some tough ordeals in the past — like the times when the CCNY team and three all-Americans from Kentucky were caught shaving points, but no one can recall a season that ended in such chaos.

"It's just gone crazy," said David Swank, former chairman of the NCAA's Infractions Committee. "To have three major programs removing themselves from competition immediately before the tournament is highly unusual."

Think of how unusual it would be to that Cornell president of long ago if he knew how they were agitating his bag of wind now.

Bulger and Romney take the 'Mitts' off

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

A recap and analysis of the week in state government.

When Sen. Jack Hart stepped up to the microphone in the Ironworkers Hall Sunday, he stood at Bill Bulger's spot, in Bill Bulger's shoes and speaking to Bill Bulger's crowd. Except for Bulger's newest worst enemy.

Hart is the senator from South Boston, the job Bulger had before and during the longest tenure as Massachusetts Senate president in history. The senator from Southie has been hosting this breakfast since before Hart was born. Bulger turned it into one of the major political events of the year; the president — U.S., that is — usually calls.

There's always some tension as rivals and outright foes show up to prove they're good sports. Bulger hasn't gone to the breakfast since he left the Senate to become UMass president. And he wasn't going to reverse himself to spend Sunday with that elitist Mitt Romney.

Things had been so polite up till now. Romney on Feb. 24 put out a budget that makes huge changes in a status quo mostly authored by the Democrats who overwhelmingly control the Legislature. But knowing the projected deficit is $3 billion whether there's a D or an R after your name, Democratic leaders and the Republican administration had been going light on the criticism and trying to keep things on a fairly high plane.

But when Bulger went public last week with his objections to Romney's restructuring of the public higher education system, it was high road be damned. He attacked Romney not just on substance — for proposing a flawed budget plan — but on moral grounds. He said Romney can't relate to the need for support of the working classes. Romney, who strikes most of those getting to know him as inherently disinclined to play rough, was unusually unrestrained in returning Bulger's fire.

The showdown came as part of a week in which the political argument over the budget was brought into clearer focus. After three weeks of circling and feinting, which comes out as "we'll have to look at the details" in Statehouse sound bites, Bulger and House Speaker Thomas Finneran pounced.

The Old Guard on Beacon Hill is starting to feel as though Romney is trying to claim all the high ground for himself, and "make himself the only good guy," as one veteran put it. The main counter-argument is that Romney makes broad, vague claims about budget savings, then offers "mumbled" retractions, as Finneran put it in a speech to the Greater Boston Chamber of Commerce.

Certainly, Romney was sending an obvious message about his intention to find ways to break away from business as usual, even as cannily practiced by his own predecessors — Bulger is, after all, a Republican appointee. William Weld gave him the UMass post after years of horse trading between the governor's office and Senate.

Now, Romney's proposing doing away with Bulger's job altogether. And so, Southie is, um, perturbed. Hart's job was to keep the event in the spirit it is intended — to prove, as the breakfast intends, that some things transcend politics — like humor, fellowship, beer. But in light of recent events, that job is going to be unusually tough. It's the nature of the news biz, but most developments last week seemed to center on the negative: shrinking what's available to citizens, or pointing out problems that don't seem to want to be solved.

• Romney says he'll close 36 health/human services offices — The governor said his administration will close 36 of the state's 164 health and human services offices to save $2.3 million in the upcoming fiscal year. Critics pointed out he did not mention the Romney budget would do more than consolidate: services would be cut too. But the governor said his budget would help recipients by making delivery more efficient.

• New pyrotechnics restrictions gain support — There will be thousands of words written and said about The Station fire this year, but perhaps the most impactful ones were spoken last week in Room B-1. Grieving family members and solemn legislators agreed: most if not all the victims would be alive today if sprinklers had been required and pyrotechnics banned at gathering places like the nightclub. Such stipulations are likely to clear the Legislature soon.

• Health care maladies diagnosed; prognosis uncertain — A series of events surfaced difficulties in the health care sector:

US Sen. Edward Kennedy highlighted a rambunctious rally labeling the absence of health coverage for about 500,000 people in Massachusetts a moral failure.

Hospitals warned the Romney budget would seriously damage their financial condition largely by limiting reimbursement rates and failing to fix the fund that covers the uninsured. Romney was scheduled to hold a summit with hospital leaders Tuesday. Administration officials said they inherited the problems and are trying to fix them while also balancing the state budget.

A new survey indicated 92 percent of employers in Massachusetts are considering passing on new health insurance co-payments and other charges to their workers.

• Governor says state can get some reimbursement for storm — A bit of bright news: Romney announced the federal government will provide money to pay for road clearing during the record-setting blizzard in February. The state can get back 75 percent of the removal costs for the 48 hours of the storm and its aftermath; Romney's hoping reimbursements will cover 72 hours of storm cleanup.

• Big-digging complete on northbound side — Okay, one more positive note: The management of the Big Dig said a huge milestone will occur this month. The northbound side of the Big Dig, the $14.6 billion highway under Boston, will open March 28, after 20 years in the making.

• Water rates likely to rise 3.9 percent — Back to the bad news now: The Massachusetts Water Resources Authority board proposed a 3.9 percent rate hike. It's the third rate increase in a year.

• MBTA fares going up a quarter — And it gets worse if you're a subway-riding, water-drinking homeowner: the official action and politics are just starting, but the MBTA intends to cover its budget problems with fare hikes this spring, officials acknowledged. Fares were raised in 2000 as well, but ridership numbers are down.

• Reilly says penalties for covering up abuse too weak — State laws addressing the failure to report abuse are too lenient and the church sex abuse scandal proves it, Attorney General Thomas Reilly said in testimony before the Criminal Justice Committee. He backed legislation increasing the fine for failure to report by 2,500 percent: to $25,000 from the current $1,000.

• Story of the week — The Bulger-Romney battle will keep killing trees and consuming data packets for months. When it comes to the UMass restructuring, here's what's important: Bulger's not in the Legislature anymore, but he's still got the votes.

Nighttime joggers need a good dose of common sense

LOCAL VIEW

OVE PYGH WILCHE

SEQ CHAPTER \h \r 1He wasn't there, and then he was, and I almost ran him over. I claim to be a careful driver and recently when I pulled out of my driveway I followed the rules I was taught in school. I looked to the left, then to the right, and then to the left again. I thought I was safe, but as soon as I started driving I saw him right in front of the car. The only reason I did not cause injury or death was that the lower part of the driveway was free of ice and snow so the traction was good. The car came to an immediate halt and so did he. I was not surprised to see that he showed all the signs of being shocked because so was I, partly because I was thinking about what could have happened and partly because I could have sworn there was nobody within a block.

In the worst case scenario I would have killed him, and in a country famous for lawsuits, my only defense would be his failure to obey the rules of traffic, follow safety standards, and show common sense. In the American law jungle this is a rather lame argument compared to the accusation that I am a reckless driver, that his family lost a loved one, his wife lost her husband, and his children their father and supporter. It should be rather evident that even though I would be the surviving party, I would still be doomed the looser.

The incident took place after dark. It was one of these cloudy winter nights during a new moon, and in addition, the street light in front of my house was out, leaving this cold winter night pitch black, except for my turned on head-lights.

The street had been plowed, leaving banks of snow partly on the shoulder and partly on the sidewalk. This caused him to run into the street and, to blend perfectly in with the night, he was dressed all in dark clothes. To make sure he could not hear anything, he was equipped with the inevitable walkman, and to break all safety rules, he was jogging in the right side of the street with the traffic coming onto him from the back.

I can understand his wish to exercise during the long dark winter, but I will never understand why he, as so many of the bicyclists, pedestrians, and joggers I see so often, absolutely has to make it attempted suicide.

Nowadays, where jogging suits with reflective material, sneakers with flickering lights, and small easily handheld (and cheaper than a walkman) flashlights are available, it should not be too much of a problem to be equipped for safe exercising after dark. To use common sense and switch from the right to the left side of the street is not only one of the few free things in life, but also a tremendous safety measure.

Let this be an appeal to those who walk, jog or bike in the streets that, you, at all times, act like responsible members of the traffic. In addition, please remember the inconsiderate behavior of this particular jogger. Had the worst of all accidents happened, I would, despite it having been caused by his negligence, have had to live with the tragedy for the rest of my life. So, please show respect when you go out in the world to do your "thing." Respect the drivers (we are people too), but first and foremost show respect to yourself. After all, it is your life put at high risk when you act irresponsibly in the traffic.

Beacon Hill Roll Call

By Bob Katzen
beaconhill@aol.com
March 14, 2003

QUESTIONS

BHRC is sponsored and underwritten by Fleet Bank as a public service for readers of the Mariner. It is written by Bob Katzen who has covered the legislature for over 25 years and has been providing this feature to newspapers since 1975.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. There were no roll call votes in the House or Senate last week. BHRC records local representatives' and senators' votes on one roll from prior legislative session.

CONSIDER VETOES (H 2003)

House 126-22, rejected an amendment requiring that any specific state budget items vetoed by the governor be brought to the full House for an override vote if two-thirds of House members sign a petition requesting the action. Amendment supporters said that without the amendment, the speaker-controlled Ways and Means Committee unilaterally decides which vetoes are considered by the House. They noted that a petition signed by two-thirds of the members shows strong support to bring a vetoed item to the House floor for a vote. Some noted that many vetoes in human service programs were never considered by the House last year because they remained in the Ways and Means Committee. Amendment opponents said the amendment flies in the face of the committee system and would take authority away from 32 members of the Ways and Means committee. They argued that the committee looks at the state's fiscal situation as a whole and argued that allowing discharge of individual spending items will result in more overrides and a continuing deficit. (A "Yea" vote is for the amendment requiring consideration of a specific veto if two-thirds of House members sign a petition. A "Nay" vote is against the amendment).

$5 SURCHARGE AT REGISTRIES OF DEEDS (S 1939)

Senate 38-0, approved an amendment establishing a $5 surcharge on all transactions at Registries of Deeds across the state. The surcharge would be imposed in addition to proposed hikes in many real estate transaction fees. The funds from the surcharge would go into a newly-created Registers Technological Fund and for five years would be used for automation and technological improvements at the state's Registries of Deeds. The funds could also be used for operational improvements and the hiring of workers only at the Registries that are under control of the Secretary of State because of the abolition of some county governments. All revenue from the surcharge would go into the state's general fund after five years and could be used for any purpose. Amendment supporters said many Registries' operations are bordering on a state of collapse including long lines, long waits and questions over the accuracy of documents. They argued that technological improvements are long overdue and would benefit consumers across the state. No senators voted against the bill but critics say the $5 surcharge is an unnecessary and unwarranted tax particularly since after five years it would go to the state's general fund and would not be used for technology improvements at the Registries. (A "Yea" vote is for the amendment).

MANDATORY SPRINKLERS AND FIREWORKS BAN- The Public Safety Committee has okayed a bill requiring all nightclubs and dance halls, regardless of size, and all commercial buildings with an area of more than 7,500 square feet, to install sprinkler systems. The proposal also bans the use of fireworks at most indoor entertainment venues. Approval of the proposal came following a hearing at which some of the families of victims of the Rhode Island nightclub fire tearfully testified.

SEXUAL DISCRIMINATION AND ETHICS LAWS- The Senate is hosting a training seminar for senators and staff during the week of March 17 on state ethics laws and public employee conduct. Last week, the Senate held a seminar for senators and staff on sexual harassment and discrimination.

DOMESTIC ABUSE (S 154)- The Public Safety Committee held a hearing on a bill imposing up to a five year prison sentence on anyone convicted of assault and battery on a family or household member. Under the terms of the bill, "family or household members" is defined as persons who are married or divorced, residing in the same household, related by blood or marriage, have a child regardless of whether they have ever married or lived together or have been in a substantive dating or engagement relationship.

REPORTING CHILD ABUSE (S 204)- Attorney General Tom Reilly led the charge as the Public Safety Committee heard testimony on his proposed legislation increasing penalties for persons who fail to report child abuse. The measure would increase the maximum penalty from the current $1000 fine to $25,000 and/or 2.5 years in prison.

POST TAX DELINQUENTS ON INTERNET (S 1737)- The Taxation Committee heard testimony on a proposal expanding a current law that allows the Department of Revenue (DOR) to disclose the names of delinquent taxpayers who have owed the state in excess of $25,000 for more than six months. The bill would require the list to be available for public inspection at DOR or by other means of publication, including the Internet.

"(Sullivan and Hill) have always kind of looked back. I've always looked forward," he said.

But one issue that could haunt Gomez is that he has never voted in a Town election or participated in Town Meeting since moving to Cohasset more than two years ago. Gomez said he did not participate initially because he was not familiar with town issues. "I don't think that should be one of the qualifications," he said. "It's not a litmus test for who should be a Selectman."

Gomez said his experience in the Navy is proof that he is committed to public service. "I regret not getting involved earlier, but the reality is I've always been involved in leading my town or my country," he said. "We've been watching. We've been learning. We've been honoring the views of longtime residents. And we've been developing our own positions. To me, this is a non-issue."

While Gomez may need to defend his lack of participation in town government, Hill will play up his role as an "active member of the community."

"I've attended as many community meetings as I could feasibly get to," said Hill, adding that in the past year he had been to almost every Selectmen's meeting, as well as those of the Zoning Board, the Board of Health and the Community Preservation Committee.

Although he has never served as an appointed or elected town official, Hill is confident that his attendance at town board meetings will be reflected in the debate. "I feel I know what the issues are. I just have to organize the facts," he said. "Last year's debate is what got me a lot of votes. I did very well in last year's debate and I feel I'll do very well in this year's as well."

Roger Hill

Michael Sullivan

Gabriel Gomez

Sullivan agreed the candidates have not been too divided on the issues. "I haven't seen any strong differences," he said. "They seem to be pushing the issue that change is important, and I don't agree with that obviously."

Sullivan said his experience as an elected official makes him the qualified candidate. "I have 13 years of municipal experience that is valuable to the town at this point. I think that's as important as anything."

Next Thursday's debate will begin at 8 p.m. following the Annual Election Supper at Beechwood Congregational Church. The debate will be hosted by Noel Collins and will be broadcast on the town's local cable channel.

Collins, who has moderated debates at both the town and state levels in the past, said races for state legislators tend to be far more heated. "The local elections tend to be more civic and cautious," he said. "That's not to say (the candidates) won't have any differences but they're far more polite."

Collins said this year's debate would be a "golden opportunity to make things more interesting." Questions will come from both the media and viewing residents, who can call the Selectmen's office at 383-4105.

"It's an anonymous way to ask a pointed question to a candidate," Collins said.

Local legislators talk runway with AG

State Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, and Sen. Robert Hedlund, R-Weymouth, met with Attorney General Thomas Reilly recently regarding the expansion of Logan Airport.

Bradley and Hedlund had requested the meeting due to the recent revelations regarding the so-called "Mitre Report". This report indicates the data used by the Secretary of Environmental Affairs during the environmental impact review process was flawed. It indicated that the benefits of adding an additional runway at Logan Airport were exaggerated by "a factor of 10".

"Given this information, we felt that it was critical to speak with Attorney General Reilly to see what position his office was going to take on the matter and I am very thankful that the Attorney General took the time to speak with us" said Bradley. "It is our hope that this issue could be litigated further in the ongoing case to lift the injunction against building an additional runway. We also wanted the Attorney General to undertake a separate legal action to re-open the environmental impact process given the fact that the submissions were based on inaccurate data.".

"It would be in the best interest of the impacted communities to re-open the environmental impact process" said Hedlund. "I am hopeful that Attorney General Reilly will agree to take immediate action"

Reilly indicated in the meeting his office will review the matter. He promised follow-up discussions with the Bradley and Hedlund as well as other members of the Legislature.

Cohasset's Nicynski making his mark on the college stage

Plans to pursue a professional career

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

If you're a theater nut and you've been around town long enough, then you're probably familiar with the work of Ron Nicynski. The longtime Cohasset resident has been acting since the age of six and directing since his days at Cohasset Middle School.

More notably, he's directed three plays with the Cohasset Plays-by-the-Sea Theater Group: "Oliver", "Into the Woods" and an adaptation dubbed "Shakespeare's West Side Story."

Now a senior at Boston College, Nicynski, 22, might be taking part in his last local production for a long time to come. This week he will direct "La Bête", written by David Hirson, at B.C.'s Robsham Arts Center. The show will run tonight and tomorrow starting at 8 p.m. and Saturday starting at 7 p.m.

Nicynski, a theater major, will graduate this spring and pursue an acting and directing career in Chicago or New York. Whether you liked what you saw in his previous productions or just want to see what all the hype is about, this could be you're last chance to do it — at least locally, that is.

Nicynski's current production is his first directing gig at B.C. "La Bête" is set in 17th century France and written in rhyming iambic-pentameter couplets. The play recounts the arrival of a vulgar street performer, Valere, into an elite company of veteran actors. The battles between Elomire, the troupe's leader, and Valere provide the basis for an antic comedy questioning the divide between high art and popular entertainment.

"The caliber of actors at B.C. is very high. It's a very professional atmosphere."
— Ron Nicynski, Boston College senior

"It's really about selling out," said Nicynski, who has been working on the project about 60 hours a week during the five and a half week rehearsal process. "It's sort of about giving up your own personal values for fame and fortune...and how easy that is for some people.

"It's really thick commentary on art and artists but in a very high style, very comedic way. That's why I chose the script. This shows you instead of tells you. It makes you think more, keeps you on your toes."

The play was critically acclaimed when it debuted on Broadway in 1992, but according to Nicynski, it missed with most audiences. "It flopped," he said. "It was three hours. It was very much a 'period style' show. It was very flat."

Nicynski's answer to that has been to pare things down and reach out to a wider audience. He shortened the play to two hours, including intermission. He sped up the punch lines to sharpen the play's humor.

"My big challenge was how do I make this work for the general masses and not just for the purists," he said. "The small, preview audiences have been very receptive."

Nicynski has led up to his college directing debut by starring in numerous lead roles in other plays at B.C. Among his more notable roles were King Herod in "Jesus Christ Superstar," Claudius in Shakespeare's "Hamlet," Dr. Dorn in Chekhov's "The Seagull," and Dr. Von Helfing in "Dracula."

Now, Nicynski is back to directing, something that he first started when he was named director of "The Wizard of Oz" at Cohasset Middle School. He said his acting experience has made him a better director.

"I keep jumping back and forth," he said. "I think it's a good thing. It makes the director see the world from the actor's point of view."

Nicynski said the transition hasn't been that difficult. "It's been easier than one would think. The caliber of actors at B.C. is very high. It's a very professional atmosphere. It's not a workshop production."

Nicynski started dancing when he was only six years old at Diane Purdy's Children's Theater Workshop in Quincy. By the time he left the school at age 14, he said, the strict learning environment had rubbed off, making him more "focused and driven."

"You learn the basics. You learn an understanding of the business itself," he said.

Now, Nicynski hopes his experience will land him a job with a professional theater company. If he does more directing, he hopes to work on adaptations, like "La Bête," where he can mold the script to make it "more accessible to the audience."

But Nicynski still has one more curtain call before he can tackle his professional dreams. For tickets, contact the Boston College Robsham Arts Center at 617-552-4200.

Ron Nicynski, 22, will graduate from Boston College this spring and plans to pursue a professional acting and directing career.

Cohasset's Jonathan Littauer, seen here trying to extricate himself from a tricky situation, follows in the footsteps of big brother Dan by being named a Mariner All-Scholastic wrestler.

Mariner All-Scholastic Wrestling team

Cohasset's Littauer, McKenna, Strazzulla and Baroudis named among area's elite

Capping off a season that saw the Cohasset wrestling team finish with a program best 18 wins, finish second at the Div. 3 South Sectionals in a 23-team field, advance nine wrestlers to the state divisional championships, four to All-States and then two to New Englands, we here at Mariner papers have named five CHS wrestlers to our All-Scholastic team, the highest number from any of the 12 public schools we cover.

As is always the case with these kinds of things, of course, the selection process with this team was not an easy one.

Several of the young men you see listed below as "Honorable Mentions" received serious consideration for All-Scholastic acknowledgement.

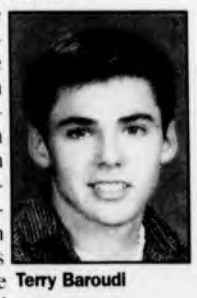
In the end, however, we limited ourselves to a team of just 20, and, after consulting with area coaches, we do feel secure that we chose the top wrestlers in Marinerland for this honor.

Jonathan Littauer - Sophomore
103 - Cohasset

Jonathan Littauer

Following in the footsteps of older brothers Ben and Dan (class of '02, two-time Mariner All-Scholastic) to become a star wrestler for Cohasset High...won the South Sectional crown, then took fourth at State Div. 3 championships and won one match in a very tough veteran field at All-States...carried a 30-4 record into the Divisional championship, with three of those losses coming to Rockland's high state ranked Paul Robinson, the other in a bout at 112 pounds...was originally slated to bump to 112 pounds this year, but did a remarkable job of maintaining his weight at 103 all season...Cohasset coach Torin Sweeney: "Jonathan is a little machine. He never gets tired and his technique is way beyond his years. He's just a strong fundamental wrestler, and he's only going to get better."

Terry Baroudi - Senior (Capt.)
135 - Cohasset



Terry Baroudi

This two-time Mariner All-Scholastic won the Div. 3 South Sectional championship, and went on from there to finish third at the state divisional championships and then second at All-States to advance to the New England wrestling championships, one of just seven in our subscriber area to do so...put together a 47-6 season, including a 37-2 regular season....played baseball at CHS through his sophomore year and football through his junior year, but decided after his junior wrestling season to give up the other sports in order to concentrate more fully on wrestling...Terry intends to wrestle in college...has narrowed his collegiate choices to Johnson & Wales and Roger Williams,.. leaning toward majoring in Business... Cohasset coach Torin Sweeney: "The most impressive thing about Terry is his work ethic and his desire to learn all he can about wrestling. Since he was a freshman, he's picked my brain constantly. He was never satisfied with just being good, and look where it got him. It's a perfect story of hard work paying off."

Phil Strazzulla - Junior (Capt.)
140 - Cohasset

Phil Strazzulla

Took third in the Div. 3 South Sectionals and fourth at the state Divisional championships in one of the toughest weight divisions in Massachusetts...lost a pair of close heartbreakers at All-States to top ranked state wrestlers... went 33-3 in the regular season...began this season wrestling at 130 pounds, but bumped up two classes (as Terry Baroudi was entrenched at 135) due to a growth spurt...beat two fellow Mariner All-Scholastics during the season at 130: splitting a pair of matches with Scituate's Steve Barry and besting Weymouth's Elijah Cheeks, a New England Wrestling championship qualifier, 15-6...played soccer his freshman year at CHS, but decided to concentrate on wrestling after that...one of the few junior captains the CHS wrestling program has ever had...wrestles for Orange Crush in the off-season, and has also attended a few wrestling camps... Cohasset coach Torin Sweeney: "Phil is a true student of the Best of the best

The Bigger View
By Joel Racicot

I have been a gym rat since I was nine years old, regularly attending High School basketball games on the South Shore for the last 11 years.

When I was 10 years old me and one of my best friend's at the time used to go to North Quincy almost every weekend to watch AAU basketball. Our brother's played for the South Shore Tigers, but we never watched them play.

Instead, we volunteered to be ball-boys for Leo Papile's BABC team. It was there that my high school basketball education began, watching the likes of Jamal Jackson, Shannon Bowman, Carmelo Travieso and Wayne Turner.

This season, I was thoroughly impressed with the excitement, and talent level in high school boys basketball on the South Shore, and was inspired to write an article about the top high school boys basketball players in "Marinerland" over the last few seasons.

I'm no Doctor Jack Ramsey of high school hoops, but I have some background, and thanks to the huge help from many area coaches, I ventured into this daunting task.

This is kind of like the NBA all 50 team that came out a few years ago, except I've decided to add the Shaquille O'Neal factor, which means I won't include players that are still active; Sorry Tom Cuddihy of Scituate, Joe Coppens of Rockland, Gerry Corcoran (2000 + points) and John Mohan of Norwell.

Who is eligible for this list? I won't go as far back as 1994/1995, but I will go as far as 1996, for no reason besides many coaches from long ago are long gone, and I would not feel confident validating my own ideas with comments from

A perfect fit

Torin Sweeney continues to follow his 'calling'

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Most of us stumble into professions and then work hard to settle in and convince ourselves that this is the place for us.

Then there are those fortunate few among us who seem to be genuinely born to their vocation. Torin Sweeney, all evidence would appear to indicate, is one in that blessed handful who falls into the latter category.

"Torin was just meant to be a coach," stated Cohasset High Athletic Director Ron Ford.

If anyone is in a position to judge this, it is Ford. The two have worked side-by-side for well over a decade at Cohasset High School. Ford has been the boys varsity head basketball coach for 11 years, and the Athletic Director for the last four. Sweeney, who currently serves as Ford's Assistant A.D., has coached just about every sport over that time: baseball, softball, football, lacrosse, golf, wrestling...and it seems to make no difference. He's enjoyed success in all.

Sweeney took over the varsity golf team three years ago, and has helped put that long moribund program back on the right track. He took over the girls lacrosse program last spring at the bequest of Ford when coach Kathy Guadiano went out on maternity leave, and promptly led the Lady Skippers to their winningest season ever and their first ever victory in the Jared Kinch.

Kinch earns TopGun lax MVP honors

Congratulations to Cohasset eight grader Jared Kinch for recently being named MVP for TopGun Lacrosse's last session at the Plymouth Sports Dome.

Would Cohasset have won the Middle School Silver Division without Jared Kinch? Probably. Would they be the powerhouse that has dominated this league for two years? Probably not.

For those of you unfamiliar with the well-oiled machine that is Cohasset, they are led offensively by Dan Trendowicz (18 goals, 10 assists). Four other players are in our top ten list - Jeff Brown (10 and 17), Michael Bunstein (17 and 9), Patrick Flynn (12 and 6), and Jared Kinch (13 and 11).

So how does Jared Kinch end up as this team's MVP, much less the MVP of the entire division? The answer comes from the story that the stat sheet doesn't tell. And that is this; Jared Kinch spent exactly half of each game in the goal. And while in the goal, he recorded the league's top save percentage (a remarkable 71%).

Back to his offensive numbers, one can only imagine what his stats would be if he played the whole game out of the net. As it was, he was the league's 4th leading scorer, and 2nd in assists.

In short, and this means no disrespect against any player on this remarkable team, Jared Kinch is a player that any coach would want on his team.

Myers scales new heights

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

Winter is usually the time reserved for the basketball players, the skiers, the wrestlers, hockey players and gymnasts. But look beyond the Skippers of Cohasset High School, and you will find another Cohasset resident excelling at a much less publicized sport.

Tom Myers, a junior at Milton Academy, recently took first place at the 5th Annual Milton Academy indoor climbing competition.

The competition is separated into three subdivisions, beginner, intermediate and advanced. Myers, along with two other teammates, swept the advanced category with a 1-2-3 finish. Over 60 climbers from the private schools of Milton, Nobles, Governor Dummer Academy, Loomis Chaffee, Exeter and Tilton took part at the competition.

Myers started with the opening round, in which climbers compete a marked route. The athletes are scored based on the difficulty and complexity of the routes they choose. Reaching the finals with five other competitors in the advanced group, Myers took part in the much sport. No one has worked harder than him to make things come together. There's a reason he's a junior captain. He sets a great example."

Matt Baroudi - Sophomore
215 - Cohasset

Matt Baroudi

The "little brother" of Terry Baroudi came seemingly out of nowhere to finish second at the Div. 3 South Sectionals, third at state divisional championships and then sixth at All-States to become the second Cohasset wrestler to qualify for New England's (older brother Terry was the other), and just the seventh in our subscriber area to do so…improved steadily over the course of the regular season, finishing with a 23-8 record… Cohasset coach Torin Sweeney: "I think Matt surprises people. He's not as physically imposing as a lot of 215-pound wrestlers, but he's got a lot more savvy and intelligence as a wrestler than most sophomores, and I think he's deceptively quick and strong."

Chris McKenna - Senior
(Capt.)
145 - Cohasset

Chris McKenna

Illness cost this two-time Mariner All-Scholastic wrestler his shot at the Divisional state championships… took third at South Sectionals to complete his season with a 31-3 record…at Sectionals, dominated Holliston's Naeem Ovins, 6-1, who went on to wrestle at All-States…a natural athlete who took to wrestling exceptionally fast after trying out for the sport his sophomore year…became the first CHS wrestler in a decade this winter to take first place in all three of CHS's regular season wrestling tourneys: Marshfield, Whitman-Hanson and Cohasset…also a standout football player for Cohasset High…sophomore brother Dave is a bright prospect for the wrestling and football teams…Cohasset coach Torin Sweeney: "Chris is just a natural athlete who progressed as quickly as a wrestler as just about anyone I've ever seen. It's a shame he didn't make it to States, because he was just dominating people. I definitely think he could have made it to All-States and quite possibly New Englands too."

Dan Villanova - Senior
(Capt.)
125 - Weymouth

Dan Villanova

A nagging knee injury couldn't stop this senior from finishing his wrestling career in style, establishing himself as one of the area's top middleweights…Jumping from 112 to 125 this season, Villanova captured second at the Div. 1 South Sectionals, third at the Div. 1 States, and fifth at the All-State Championships to reach the New Englands…His performance was key to the Wildcats winning their sixth-straight Sectional title, Bay State League title, and 21-1 season, their only loss coming against powerhouse Lowell…Villanova won division and state titles at 112 as a junior…Also a lacrosse player at WHS, Villanova has been accepted to Roger Williams and applied to Kings Point…He plans to continue his wrestling career and study either Computer Science or Law. Weymouth coach Kevin Mackin: "Dan's a very polished wrestler. He's learned a lot of technique over the years and has been very comfortable at every position. He's basically the whole package."

Jay Anzalone - Senior
(Capt.)
215 - Weymouth

Jay Anzalone

A Div. 1 South Sectional champion at 215, Anzalone was key to the Wildcats winning their sixth-straight Sectional Championship…The senior went on to place second at the Div. 2 States, was fourth at the All-State Championships, and won a match at New Englands…Sometimes bumped to heavyweight (275), Anzalone's athleticism in the upper-weights set him apart from his opponents, leading to his team's Bay State League title and 21-1 overall record…He was one of the team leaders in pins this season…Also a standout on the WHS football team, Anzalone plans to attend Northeastern to continue his football career and study Criminal Justice. Weymouth coach Kevin Mackin: "Jay came into this to stay in shape for football, but actually turned himself into an excellent wrestler through hard work. He competed at heavyweight when we needed him and gave up 40 to 60 pounds. He was still able to beat opponents because of his athleticism and balance."

Elijah Cheeks - Senior
130 - Weymouth

Cheeks recorded one of his most successful seasons to date, capping his four-year wrestling career at the New England Championships…The senior spent the last two seasons seeing only limited action behind the team's veterans, but this season was his year…After helping his team record a Bay State League title and 21-1 overall season, Cheeks's third place finish in the 130 class at the Div. 1 South Sectionals helped key the Wildcats' sixth-straight team title at the meet…Cheeks went on to take fourth at the Div. 1 States, fifth at the All-State Championships, landing him at New Englands. Weymouth coach Kevin Mackin: "Elijah is probably my favorite story of the season. He didn't see much action for two seasons but he hung in there and turned it around. Most kids generally pack it in, but he was the opposite of that. He took his lumps and showed the team what you can accomplish through hard work and perseverance."

Mike Cicchese - Junior
119 - Weymouth

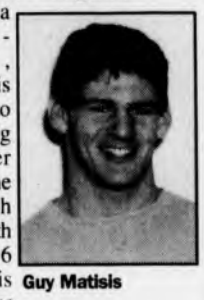
In a break-out season for the Weymouth team, Cicchese captured the Div. 1 South Sectional title at 119, defeating fellow All-Scholastic Christian Vercollone, 13-1, in the finals…The first-year varsity wrestler had a great overall Sectional tournament, taking less than a minute to pin his first two opponents, before defeating New Bedford's Tuoi Dang, 2-0, in the semifinals…Cicchese went on to wrestle at the Div. 1 State Championships…A fierce and dedicated grappler in the highly competitive 119 class, Cicchese put in the work off-season at several wrestling camps and improved his skills, racking up 30 plus wins in the process…His consistent performance this season helped land the Wildcats their sixth-straight Sectional title and win two tournaments (Whitman/Hanson, Weymouth) en route to an impressive 21-1 season and unbeaten Bay State League title…With seven key WHS grapplers graduating this spring, Cicchese will be a top returning athletes to the Wildcats team. Weymouth coach Kevin Mackin: "Mike improved tremendously. He got better on his feet and got stronger. He needed to work on getting stronger and on recording take downs, and it was evident that he did."

Greg Kahn - Senior (Capt.)
140 - Hingham

Greg Kahn

A two-time Mariner All-Scholastic, Kahn finished his Hingham career with another solid season going 50-4…The senior won the Div. 2 South Sectional title at 140, helping the Harbor-men capture the team title… Went on to take third at the Div. 2 State Champion-ships, and went on to wrestle at New Englands…Won three tournaments this season (Belmont, Scituate, Cohasset) and was a finalist at the prestigious Lowell tourney…He holds two Hingham High records for wins by a senior (50) and pins in dual meets (18)…Kahn also plays football at HHS and plans to attend college. Hingham coach Keith Durham: "Greg was a wonderful leader. No one was able to contain him on the mat. He's very strong in all aspects of the sport."

Guy Matisis - Sophomore
189 - Hingham



Guy Matisis

Just a sophomore, Matisis is proving to be a big contender on the South Shore with 36 wins…His first place finish at the Div. 2 South Sectionals at 189 helped the Harbormen capture the South team title…Matisis went on to wrestle at the Div. 2 state championships, where he reached the semifinals…Matisis won the Scituate tourney, was third at Belmont, was a finalist at Cohasset, and reached the quarters at Lowell…Matisis set a school record for wins by a sophomore (36)…Also a linebacker on the Hingham football team, Matisis will be among the top returning athletes to the HHS team next year. Hingham coach Keith Durham: "He's got a great work ethic and is relentless. He'll do whatever he has to do to win. He's a great athlete."

Dave Laramee - Senior
130 - Rockland

Dave Laramee

Laramee jumped several weight classes this season and still saw the type of success he's enjoyed throughout his wrestling career…Laramee won the Div. 3 South Sectional title at 130 and was named the meet's "Outstanding Wrestler"… Suffered an unfortunate setback at the Div. 3 State Championships, ripping a tendon in his leg…His dedication to the sport is unmatched, according to his coach…Laramee helped Rockland capture second place in the Patriot League this season…The senior is also a standout on the RHS cross country team and plans to attend college. Rockland coach Tim Brown: "He's the type of athlete every coach would want on his team. You ask him to jump and he's already in the air asking how high. He puts in the extra work in the off-season. He's a very coachable kid."

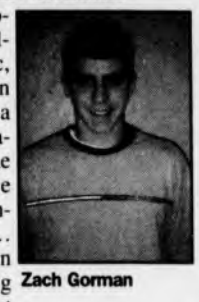
Terry Baroudi prepares to lower the boom on one of his 47 victims this season.

Zach Gorman - Senior
125 - Rockland



Zach Gorman

A two-time All-Scholastic, Gorman capped a great season at the All-State Championships… Unbeaten entering the meet at 42-0, Gorman's only two losses came here… Gorman was the Div. 3 South Sectional champion at 125…According to his coach, Gorman's great conditioning and natural wrestling ability is what sets him apart…Helped Rockland capture a second-place finish in the Patriot League, behind only Duxbury…Gorman was also a standout on the RHS cross country team in the fall. Rockland coach Tim Brown: "He's very aggressive and intense. He's a good all-around wrestler and can be very dominating. He's in great condition. Every time we ran at practice, he would finish first."

Paul Robinson - Sophomore
103 - Rockland

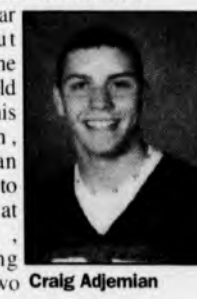
Just a sophomore, Robinson was clearly the most dominating lightweight grappler on the South Shore this season…His aggressiveness and uncharacteristic strength at the 103 class set him apart from other grapplers…Robinson pinned just about every opponent he faced and racked up a team high…Won the Marshfield, Scituate, and Cohasset tournaments and suffered an unfortunate setback at the Div. 3 South Sectionals, not making his weight…He was the top seed in the meet…Robinson was also key to Rockland's second-place finish in the Patriot League…The sophomore has run cross country and track at RHS and plans to play football next fall. Rockland coach Tim Brown: "He's pinned everyone in the area this season. He's very strong for his class and only had one bad day, which was unfortunately at Sectionals. He can only get better."

Dan Cotrone - Senior
(Capt.)
275 - Hanover

Don Cotrone

One of the most athletic heavyweight grapplers around, Cotrone capped yet another solid season wrestling with the big men going 38-2…The senior was third at the Div. 3 South Sectionals, but went on to place second at the Div. 3 States, All-States, and New England Championships, falling to only nemesis Jeff Parker of Foxboro in three tight decisions…His quickness on the mat clearly set him apart from his opponents over the years, thanks to his role as a lineman on the Hanover High football team…A three-time All-Scholastic, Cotrone plans to attend college next year. Hanover coach Bill Dunn: "Dan is very athletic. He is very quick and agile. Recently, he has been doing a lot more than just throwing his weight around."

Craig Adjemian - Junior
(Capt.)
152 - Marshfield



Craig Adjemian

A clear standout on the Marshfield team this season, Adjemian was one to watch at 152, recording only two losses…
Just a junior, his leadership on the team has earned him captain status…Adjemian won the Cohasset tourney and took third at Marshfield's own holiday tourney…Second at the Div. 2 South Sectionals, Adjemian suffered a heartbreaking setback at the Div. 2 state championships as he was recorded as being just .1 pound over his weight and was deemed unable to wrestle despite being highly seeded…A year-round grappler, Adjemian took third at last year's Bay State Games…Also a football player at MHS, Adjemian will return to captain the wrestling team next season. Marshfield coach John Kenney: "It's unfortunate that his season ended so abruptly because he certainly had the talent. He's the hardest worker on the team. He's got no one else around him. He was a junior captain and was outstanding at that."

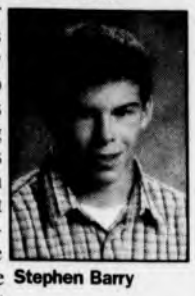
Stephen Barry - Junior
130 - Scituate



Stephen Barry

If not for James McCarthy who knows how long Barry's season might have lasted...the Scituate junior lost only eight times all season against 28 wins, with three of those losses coming to the aforementioned Mansfield High senior, the last two in the Sectional and Div. 3 state championships...avenged his other regular season losses, splitting his season's series with Rockland's Dave Laramee (2-2) and topping Cohasset's Phil Strazzula after suffering an early season loss at this hands...also beat Cohasset star Terry Baroudi, who went on to win the Div. 3 South Sectional crown at 135 pounds and qualify for New England's...finished fourth and Sectionals, and then lost a one-point heartbreaker at the Div. 3 state championships to lose his shot of advancing to All-States...finished the regular season as the state's 10th ranked wrestler at 130-pounds...hopes to wrestle in college...Scituate coach Tom Giacomozzi: "The best thing about Stephen is his work ethic. We found a weakness in his wrestling style that McCarthy was able to exploit, and that just made him re-double his commitment to the sport. He's already a very good wrestler, but I predict he's going to really tear it up next year."

Sean Dolan - Senior (Capt.)
125 - Braintree

Sean Dolan

After finishing second at South Sectionals, the senior was unable to compete at the Div. 2 state championships due to a nasty case of bronchitis...a solid technical wrestler who improved all four years...put together a strong 18-7 regular season...lauded by rookie head coach Greg Rainieri for his leadership and helping to hold his young Wamps team together...plans to major in Civil Engineering at Norwich University, where he also hopes to wrestle...Braintree coach Greg Rainieri: "Sean is a good wrestler who really stepped it up in the postseason. The thing that made him most special on this team this year, though was his leadership. He was the first kid to practice and the hardest worker. He set the tempo, and his enthusiasm rubbed off on just about everyone."

Brian Hess - Junior
171 - Silver Lake

The junior took second at Sectionals in a very difficult field, and then third at the Div. 1 State championships to become the only Silver lake wrestler to advance to All-States...finished the regular season with a record of 25-2, and went 33-6 overall...not bad, considering wrestling is his "hobby"...uses wrestling primarily to stay in shape for football...was a star two-way performer (tailback/linebacker) for the Lakers on the gridiron this fall, leading all team running backs in rushing and finishing second in tackles...hopes to play college football as a linebacker...wrestled at 171 this year because 189 was filled by 2002 Mariner All-Scholastic Sean Kane...plans to bulk up for football and wrestle at 189 next year...Silver Lake coach Greg Black: "Brian is first and foremost a very good athlete. On the mat, he is very aggressive, and he works very hard. He hates giving away a single point. I guess that's the football mindset of not wanting to give up even one more yard than necessary."

Brian Hess

Christian Vercollone - Sophomore
119 - Silver Lake

Christian Vercollone

On the heels of a solid freshman campaign at 103-pounds, Christian put together an outstanding 21-3 regular season at 119...went on to finish second at Sectionals and fifth at the State I Divisional championships, missing out by one spot of qualifying for All-States...like the other Silver Lake athlete named an All-Scholastic (Brian Hess), wrestling is merely Christian's "sporting hobby." this extremely athletic sophomore aspires to follow in the footsteps of older brothers Luke and J.P. (both currently on scholarship at Seton Hall) and play college soccer...Luke was also a sensational high school wrestler...one-year older brother Anthony is also a very good soccer player and wrestler for Silver Lake...Christian, a two-year varsity soccer player for Silver Lake, has played the last two years on both the state and regional Olympic Developmental Program soccer teams...was named a Mariner All-Scholastic Honorable Mention for soccer this past fall...Silver Lake coach Greg Black: "Christian really turned the corner this year as a wrestler. He was very smart out there, especially at the end of the season. He should be a very exciting wrestler the next two years."

Attention all CHS baseball fans

It's hard to believe with all of the cold weather and snow that it is still on the ground that it is time to start thinking of baseball. The Red Sox are well underway down in Fort Myers and thoughts of those warm summer afternoons at Fenway are creeping in. Hope springs eternal for those die-hard Red Sox fans as a new General Manager and some new players on board have us hoping for a World Series title this year.

Things are looking up this year as well for Cohasset High School's baseball program. New Varsity head coach Al Gallotta and new sub varsity coach, Damian DAngelo, are looking forward to turning things around for the baseball program in Cohasset.

Coach Gollatta brings more than 20 years of coaching experience to Cohasset. Most recently, coach Gollatta was with Archbishop Williams. Coach D'Angelo has coached at the varsity level in Connecticut. It did not take long for word to get out to the students about the new coaches. At a recent spring sports meeting, almost 40 players signed up to play baseball. In years past, it was a struggle to put enough players together to have both a varsity and sub varsity team. In addition to the new coaches, a group of die-hard baseball parents got together and formed the Diamond Club. The Diamond Club was formed to help support Cohasset High School baseball. Not only were both coaches overwhelmed by the turnout of players, but also they were astounded to see so many parents eager to see baseball succeed in Cohasset.

The task ahead of the new coaches is daunting. Coach Gallotta was encouraged to see such a fine feeder system for baseball in Cohasset, that being the Cohasset Youth Baseball and Softball association. In fact, the new Little League complex definitely factored into Coach Gallotta's decision to be the new head coach.

But putting in place a baseball program for the older boys is not without its obstacles. Some of Coach Gallotta's goals for his first year as head coach are to attain a home plate batting cage, some pitching screens and a full dimensional batting cage. The Diamond Club is seeking contributions to help coach Gallotta achieve the tools that he needs to rebuild Cohasset High School baseball.

Please help us support coach Gallotta and his efforts to once again make Cohasset High School baseball a competitive and respected team in the South Shore League. Anyone interested in making a contribution to help coach Gallotta achieve his objective, could send a check along to the Diamond Club, P.0 Box 63, Cohasset MA 02025. Thank you for your consideration and we look forward to a renewed baseball program at CHS.

state tourney. Guadiano has moved on to take another coaching position, and Sweneey is back this spring looking to improve on this unprecedented success.

Sweeney conceded up front before taking both of these jobs that he knew relatively little about either golf or lacrosse

"It almost doesn't matter what the sport is," continued Ford. "He just has a way or connecting with younger people and getting the most out of them. He creates a family-type atmosphere with his teams, and his athletes seem to flourish."

In no venue is this "family-type atmosphere" more vividly apparent than Sweeney's true athletic passion: wrestling. Sweeney starred in this sport at Cohasset High, winning the Sectional championship in the 134-pound weight division in 1981 as a junior and finishing runner-up at Sectionals a year later as a senior at 128 pounds. Coaching the sport was his real calling, though, and Ford's predecessor as A.D., the late Clark Chatterton, was the first to recognize this, as he named Torin his head coach just two years out of high school in 1983.

In the 20 years that have passed, Sweeney has earned a college degree, become a teacher in the Cohasset school system, gotten married, started a family, coached close to a dozen different sports at the middle school and high school level and compiled 191 team wins for his wrestling program.

"I think that record says it all," asserts CHS senior Terry Baroudi, one of this year's captains who went on to win the Sectional championship at 135 pounds and advance all the way to the New England Wrestling Championships. This was one of many highlights in this season that saw the Skippers post a program-best 18 wins and take second as a team at the Div. 3 South Sectionals in a strong 23-team field.

"We've got one of the smallest schools around, but year in-year out, Torin just seems to turn out winners," continued Baroudi, who will wrestle at either Johnson & Wales or Rogers Williams next year. "That's not a coincidence. It's tough to explain, but he's just the kind of guy you want to work hard for. He puts so much into it, and cares so much about us as people and the program. It makes you want to work your hardest for him."

Coach Sweeney (foreground) obviously believes in the hands-on approach.

This past weekend, several of Sweeney's current and former wrestlers decided to do something special for the longtime coach. The annual team breakup banquet, in most years a pot luck dinner at a local hall, was turned into a gala event at the Atlantica Restaurant and a day full of honorings for the double-decade mentor. All sorts of plaques and mementos were presented to Sweeney. Even Torin's wife, Becky, wasn't forgotten. She was presented a $100 gift certificate to a local spa for a day of pampering.

"After all of the extra hours Torin puts in during the wrestling season, and all the time she's at home alone with their baby (18 month old Olivia), she more than deserves it," noted Baroudi with a laugh.

Sweeney was humbled by the shows of appreciation.

"I've probably taken more out of the program than anyone," said the 39-year old Sweeney. "I've been blessed to have some great wrestlers and some great wrestling families. The parents in this town have been extremely supportive of me, and the kids really inspire me."

As witnessed by the fantastic turnout at Saturday's banquet, held at Cohasset's Atlantica Restaurant, Sweeney has maintained a close relationship over the years with his wrestlers. Several, in fact, remain integral figures in his life. One of his ex-grapplers is his banker, another his electrician. Sweeney recites the roll, sharing anecdotes of recent contacts with current, relatively recent and long ago charges, several of whom went on to become extremely well-to-do businessmen.

"There's probably a couple I might be able to get a job with after retirement driving their limo," said Sweeney with a laugh.

1988 CHS graduate Peter Buckley, one of Sweeney's many Sectional champs, is now his assistant coach. He runs the Cohasset Middle School wrestling program, the feeder system Sweeney calls his "secret weapon."

"If you're thinking of writing a story about me, you'd better not dare leave Peter Buckley out," was one of the first things Sweeney said when this typist made his intentions clear. "I don't even want to think about where I'd be without him."

So why do so many people who enter Sweeney's life stay in it? The answer, says Cohasset High Wrestling Booster Chairman Tony Carbone, is simple, and it goes hand-in-hand with the success the longtime coach has enjoyed.

"He's just a great guy, a great motivator and a great coach," says Carbone, who is pleased to be following the third of his three sons, sophomore Bill, through Torin's wrestling program. "He gets the most out of the kids because he gives everything he can to them."

Best of the best

veteran math and chemistry teachers from area high schools.

We will start, in no particular order, with one of the best high school athletes in the South Shore during his time, Norwell's Dan MacNamara-class of 2000.

MacNamara scored 1,810 points and had over 1000 rebounds in his career, averaging 29 points and 12 rebounds a game for the Clippers his senior season.

"Dan MacNamara was the best all-around player I've ever coached," noted eight year veteran Norwell head coach John Willis. "Dan's drive, his will to win was second to none. He just had a knack of being at the right place at the right time."

We will move south to Silver Lake High School where "Hoosiers" extra Chris Conroy drained jump-shots until graduating in 2001, with over 1000 career points.

"Chris Conroy is the most complete basketball player I've seen at the high school level in the last three or four years, though (Norwell High junior) John Mohan has begun to make me call that back into question, " noted senior sports editor of the Mariner newspapers Mike Spellman. "Chris could score from the anywhere— inside, outside or by taking it strong. He was a much better rebounder than his size (6-2, 170 pounds) implied (see Dan MacNamara), and he was also an outstanding ball-handler and passer. He was also a very good athlete, but I thought he got as much out of his athletic gifts as any player I've seen. When he turned the ball over, it was usually the result of him surprising a teammate with an absolutely perfect pass."

Chris, who led the Lakers to consecutive OCL championships in his final two years, is now a sophomore at St. Anselms who averaged 10.1 points for the Hawks this season while shooting a team best 45.2 percent (57-for-126) from 3-point land.

Let's turn back the clock to a 1998 tournament game in Rockland High School, where I saw two of the most explosive high school basketball players I've ever seen this side of 1992/1993 Burke High star "Bunny" Jefferson: Chris Worden of Rockland (class of 1998), and Colin Ready of Scituate (class of 1998).

"(Chris) Worden without question was one of the premier players in the area," noted 22 year Rockland head coach Bob Fisher. "He could elevate, shoot, put the ball on the floor and he was extremely quick.

"Worden was as complete a player as there has been in the area over the last few years," added Norwell's John Willis.

Worden scored 18 plus points a game as a senior, and led his undefeated team to the Fleetcenter.

Ready— who had the first step of a Lear Jet— scored just under 1000 points for his career, and was the point guard on a Sailors team that missed a trip to the Boston Garden by one game in 1995.

"Of all the kids I've ever coached against, I had as big a fear of Colin Ready as any," noted Fisher. "He was one of the quickest players I've seen from end line to end line."

Third year Scituate head coach Matt Poirier added, "Colin was the fastest player I've seen with the ball in his hand."

Diving a bit deeper into the past, we will go to 1996, and Cohasset's Jared Hardwick.

Hardwick was a Globe and Ledger All-Scholastic, and led his team in scoring, averaging 26 points per game his senior season. Hardwick was also part of two South Sectional champion Skippers squads in 95' and 96'.

"Jared was the best I've ever coached," noted 12 year Cohasset head coaching veteran Ron Ford. "We went 31-1 in two seasons in the South Shore League with him on the team. That should help you understand the kind of player he was."

With Conroy and Ready in the back-court, MacNamara, Worden and Hardwick up front, I feel like we have a formidable starting five.

Now for the bench, from most recent graduates to the earlier ones:

Shooting guard James Smith (Abington, class of 2002), three-time Patriot League all-star center Jesse McKinnell (Scituate, '02), point guard Bobby Murphy (Rockland, '01), Brian Cerrone (Hanover, '00), Jay Edwards (Norwell, '99), Ben Loomis and Ryan Kent ('97) of Marshfield's 1997 undefeated regular season team, Ryan Mitchell (Rockland, '99), Josh Davidson (Rockland, '99), who was mentioned by three separate coaches as one of best defensive players they have ever seen in high school basketball, Tom Carey (Abington, '99), who recently scored his 1000th point at Suffolk University. Pat Durgin and Andrew Monticone, both Hingham graduate's in1998. Durgin went on to captain for Bentley College.

All of the player's above were league all-stars and all-scholastics, and if I had more time and space to write about them, and all the comments I received from area coaches about them I would. If there were any glaring omissions from the 17 player's mentioned over the last eight season's forgive me.

Cohasset, resident Jodi Rosano has recently been named as an early selection to the 2003 S.S.B.C. "Seadogs " 11-and-Under Division AAU Travel Team Baseball Program as announced by the South Shore Baseball Club in Hingham. As a member of the "Seadogs 11, Jodi will compete against other AAU (Amateur Athletic Union) organizations in Massachusetts for the right to appear in the AAU Baseball National Championships to be held in Disney's Wide World of Sports Complex, Florida this coming August. "Jodi represents the epitome of hustle and determination. A player who always gives his best." says Ralph Berry, 11-and-Under Team Manager.

Locally, Jodi is a fifth grader at Deerhill School in Cohasset and plays for the Red Sox, a Major League team in Cohasset's Little League. The "Seadogs" program is not intended to replace but rather supplement local league play.

Growing in popularity, AAU Travel Team Baseball gives players, coaches and families the opportunity to travel and compete in a national tournament. "Competing in the National Championships is a thrill of a lifetime," says Frank Niles, President of the South Shore Baseball Club.

The South Shore Baseball Club will field eight teams in 2003 from the 10-and-Under to the 17-and-Under Divisions. Each member of the program is responsible for fund-raising approximately $2,000 to participate. In this portion of the competition, the climbers must utilize strategy and improvisation to create a manageable climbing route as they ascend the wall.

Finalists are given merely two minutes to assess the wall before making their climbs.

Myers has been climbing for three years with the Milton Academy Outdoor Program, incorporating different sports all year as part of his climbing training. Kayaking, hiking, several different types of skiing, rock climbing and ice climbing all contribute to his recent indoor competition success.

MaxLax Championship Results

As they say, all good things must come to an end sometime (or at least until next year anyway), but boy did we have a great weekend of lax action to close out our first year of MaxLax. There were great battles all throughout the playoffs - like the BLADES playoff wins against perennial powerhouses from Hingham and Scituate to reach the U14 finals. The U12's also gave us plenty of excitement as the two top teams at the end of the season battled through to reach their Championship and as result gave us a memorable finale in their title match-up as well. So, without further adieu, here's the highlights:

U12 Championship

Spartans 11, Cougars 9

This was the match up that we were hoping to see as these two top teams had been butting heads back and forth all session long and it was time to finally declare who got the bragging rights. The SPARTANS got the first tally on a solo shot from Dean Kennedy as he used a "screen" to his full advantage to keep the goalie shielded from the shot until the last minute.

Eamon Davis got the COUGARS in the game by taking the face off and finding the lower corner after dodging several Spartans in traffic and brushing past Ian Porter who provided a perfectly set pick. Kennedy than lit the lamp for his second point on a reflex one-timer when he found a rebound after a point blank save by the Cougars goalie Jack Murphy. In the "what worked once . .." category, Reynolds did his part to keep the tandem alive and demonstrating why the Spartans were in 1st place as they completed a five pass clear to let him finish uncontested. With the momentum swinging towards another Spartans win, the Cougars defense knew they had to step up and led by Richard Buckley and Derek Cyr, they kept the Spartans barrage at bay in order to give their offense an opportunity to keep them in it.

Murphy continued his brilliant play in the goal and in one stand stopped 3 shots in a row to clear the ball to Mark Seraikas who drew a double team before getting it off Davis. Davis finished the clear with another tally on a blistering shot from half court and Johnny Wade quickly followed that up by scoring off of a "FIRE-CRACKER", a play that the Cougars had perfected for just such an occasion that had Thomas Pecca giving the feed. Reynolds (who narrowly beat out Davis for the scoring honors) netted his hat trick after a penalty put the Cougars in a man down situation. With only a couple of minutes left on the clock, the Spartans were setting up for another quick score with a fast break, and Chris Sperandio made it count, but he paid the price as he took a bone jarring shot from the Cougars Olly Forrer as he released the ball. As time ran out on the first half, it was the Spartans up 6 - 3.

Normally this is a safe lead for this highly talented team from Scituate, but the Cougars were determined to make a game of it and came out on fire in the second half. Will Wise got his first of the day by coming from behind the cage and freezing the defense with a face dodge that left no doubt as to the outcome. Tim Curran took a quick feed from Ian Quinlan to put another one in the back of the net and Davis won the next face-off and put a rocket past the goalie to narrow the gap to 6 - 5. Kennedy joined Reynolds with his hat trick, again as the beneficiary of great ball control and passing through the lanes to set up the quick fake and score. Wise then picked the pocket of a Spartans clear in mid-air after Jackson Dean (who scored his first goal in the game before) forced a bad pass; and then made it count with a shot from outside the box that ricocheted off the post and into the top corner. The Cougars were keying in on Reynolds and Kennedy, but the Spartans had too many weapons in their arsenal as they simply shifted their own offensive focus and lined up another star in the making Paul McInerney who got not one, but two goals in a row off of almost identical face-off wins that left him uncovered on the low post for easy tallies. With the lead now solidly in favor of the Spartans, time was beginning to become a factor and both teams powered up their defense which for the Spartans, resulted in three unanswered scores. You guessed it - a 3rd hat trick on the day as McInerney got his third goal, while Reynolds added 2 more of his own to finish his day at 5. With the score 12 - 6 in favor of the Spartans and less than 3 minutes to go, reality should have set in for the Cougars, but funny thing about Champions, they never give up and this team wouldn't.

Taking quick advantage of a free clear, Davis took it to the cage in a New York minute, catching everyone off guard on a laser-like strike. He then repeated his performance by winning the next face-off and cranking from the top of the box down low. The Spartans gained possession on the next start and played strategic ball control to keep the score frozen and succeeding in eating away precious seconds with each new completed pass. The Cougars managed to double up the ball carrier and forced a turnover that set up a perfect "BRONX Left" (give and go) between Wise and Davis for what turned out to be the last score of the session. As the final seconds slipped away, the Spartans were able to claim the Championship hats and another thrilling adventure for the memory books of both rosters.

U14 Championships

StingRays 16, Blades 10

The SRAYS had been steadily improving all session long and they were clearly peaking as they came into the playoffs and with a 2nd seed birth as they were able to advance on the strength of their horses and had fully expected to be here. The BLADES on the other hand, had an uphill battle all the way and had "beaten the odds" to advance to the "Show" in hard fought victories against the Bears (3rd Seed) and the Talons (1st Seed), both of which had beaten them repeatedly in the regular season. So it was the underdogs against the heir to the throne and nothing in this game was going to be taken for granted.

The adventures began with Pete Oswald winning the opening face-off for the Blades and taking it immediately to the cage, only to have his shot stopped cold by a great save, but he calmly scooped up the rebound and reversed directions placing it perfectly in the open corner. This seemed to trigger an offensive explosion by the SRAYS as they clicked off 4 unanswered goals in an exhibition of possession defense and precise ball movement that didn't allow a turnover for almost 5 minutes of play. Scoring twice was the league's leading scorer Mike Rice with Ryan Donovan and Andrew Gormley also getting one apiece. Donovan's coming on a college level pick and roll that everyone applauded.

The Blades didn't get this far watching other teams have all the fun and after a tremendous defensive stand led by Graham George and Justin Connors that practically shut down the SRAYS juggernaut, Mike Grimm put on a clinic of his own with two gorgeous stunt plays for scores. One coming off a long clear from Chris Mills who forced a turnover and then found Grimm mano-a-mano; and the second, on a cut from behind the cage that Mark Flibotte read perfectly as he put it on Grimm's stick at full stride leaving the SRAYS keeper with no chance to react. Oswald, an ace hockey player in his "spare time", followed suit by knocking down a SRAY shot in the defensive end, scooping the ball on the run, and taking it end to end for a score that gave the Blades a 4-3 advantage.

This was the first game in a long while that the SRAYS had been down and they quickly put the horses back in and put a furious rush on to close out the period. After some great defensive plays by Nathan Porter and PJ McCaw, Rice managed to dance along the crease to slip one past Wes Ulmer who had managed to stuff him just a few plays earlier. With the Blades getting the next face-off, Flibotte, (an "old-school" crease attackman if there ever was one), got the step on his defender and opened the seam on the top side and took a perfect pass from Mills for a one timer to the goalie's stick side for another Blades score to tie it up. The Blades got a bad break on a slashing call that opened up a man advantage for the SRAYS, an advantage that they weren't going to squander as they put together a 4 pass scoring drive that had Rice finishing to cap off the half with the SRAYS up 6-5.

For those that have followed the league and in particular the play of the Blades, they knew that this was a dangerous 2nd half team as they had yet to lose a game that they had been even with or one behind at the half. This track record was certainly looking to repeat itself as the 2nd period opened up with a "Gatorade" energy burst that set off a dominant offensive rampage.

Ramsey Davis, fresh from a championship basketball game, lifted the Blades up another notch when he opened the half with a solo tally that was pure competitive reflex - finding a loose ball and shooting as he turned to find glory. Oswald then got the next face-off and smoked it past the goalie after only two strides from the center line and followed it up with a give and go with Mills that allowed him a "walk-in" goal just seconds later. Four minutes into the 2nd half and the SRAYS were now down by 2.

However, while the SRAYS may have been a little stunned as this was new territory for them, they were certainly not defeated and they went to an aggressive run and gun style of play that began to wear the Blades down. On the comeback trail, Donovan got two goals to finish off his hat trick while Gormley capped his "trik" as well to bring the game back to a single point contest. The Blades responded with a college level 3 point play from the "X" (that we'll see again in the Spring) that gave Grimm his hat trick with Porter and Mills assisting. Score tied again with less than 5 minutes to play. With fresh legs and the game clearly on the line, the SRAYS continued to wear down the Blades and Rice made them pay with two quick strikes that they seemed helpless to do anything about. Smelling the blood in the water, the SRAYS went for the knock out punch only to find that the Blades were still very much alive. Justin Connors stopped another Rice assault and then followed it up with a quick clear to McCAw who drew a double team that let defenseman Graham George slip over on a middie-back and take a pass that led to a score that would be the final Blades tally. Out of gas and out of tricks, the Blades fought down to the wire, but late scores by Rice and two by Dan Ferzoco (along with some last minute "frustration" penalties that put the Blades in man down for the last two minutes of play); ended up sealing the victory for the SRAYS. All in all though it was a great run for both teams as they both capped off winning seasons and gave themselves something to play for when they face each other again on the "real stuff" in a few weeks time.

Scenes from Hull's Snow Row

Photos by Lynne Layman

Just before the start, crews ready on the beach for the spectacular start of Snow Row 2003 on Saturday, March 8. Snow Row covers a 3-3/4 mile triangular course starting off at Windmill Point in Hull, continuing around Sheep Island, past the Peddocks Island day marker, and back to shore.

Members of the crew of the Sound from the Sound School in New Haven, Conn. hurry into their positions. A huge crowd gathered on the beach beside Windmill Point boathouse to share in the wild LeMans-style start.

The chaos of the start as crews try to turn their boats around and head out around the course. Entirely within the view of the boathouse, the event is as much a thrill for spectators as for participants.

Cohasset's CMI crew pulls away in a sliding seat four. Fifty-three boats took part in the exciting, annual event.

IT'S HAPPENING

The Sarah Jane on her round-the-world cruise.

Sailing talk for student coastal research center

The Cohasset Yacht Club will continue its annual support for maritime activities by sponsoring a public lecture on Saturday April 12 at 7 p.m. The speakers for this event will be CYC members Martha and Dana Robes who will present a program on their recently concluded five-year around the world cruise on their cruising yacht Sarah Jane, a Little Harbor 48.

During their voyage, the Robes logged more than 40,000 miles sailing west to east. This lecture will focus on a portion of the trip covering roughly the first two years. During this time, the Robes traveled from Florida to Australia, spanning the South Pacific with stops in such exotic locales as the Friendly Islands (Tonga, Vava'u and Ha'apai), French Polynesia, and New Zealand. (All this provides a sharp contrast to last year's speaker Cam Lewis who spent much of his three month circumnavigation avoiding "growlers" in the Southern Ocean!)

The Robes are currently in the process of building a 65-foot glass Hood design in their yard with launching expected in May.

Proceeds from the talk will go to the Cohasset High School Summer Institute's Center for Student Coastal Research. These funds are being specifically earmarked for construction of two Gloucester Gulls. The Gloucester Gull or Light Dory is a 15.5-foot rowing dory that students will construct in order to carry out water quality studies in Cohasset Harbor, the Gulf River, and Little Harbor.

Additionally, in November this group received a grant from the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency to "enable Cohasset Middle High School students to work as Summer Institute interns re-establishing water quality monitoring in the Gulf River and to assist the Gulf Association in its goal of conducting a Natural Resources Inventory of the Gulf River Watershed."

The location for the lecture will again be St. Anthony's Parish Center and the cost will be $12 per person (students free) if reservations are made by telephone (781) 383-9280, $15 at the door. The lecture is open to the public

Details can be obtained by calling Steve Bobo at (781) 383-9280.

Appalachian Festival

The Cohasset Appalachia Service Project (ASP) will sponsor its third annual Appalachian Festival on Saturday, March 29 at First Parish Hall (23 No. Main St.) and Second Congregational Church (next to Cohasset Town Hall).

A unique blend of Appalachian traditions will be presented to help awaken people to the culture that all of the ASP volunteers have come to appreciate so much. The festivities will begin at 6 p.m. with a family-style, sit-down dinner featuring Appalachian cuisine.

An Appalachian Mountain Marketplace will take place from 7:15 to 8 p.m.. Authentic Appalachian crafts will be for sale, chances can be purchased for an Appalachian Quilt. A slide show of ASP previous trips will also be shown.

Southern Rail, a local favorite Bluegrass/Gospel band, will cap off the evening with a concert at 8 p.m. There will be some foot stompin', hand clappin' entertainment as old and new fans of this local, award winning performance.

Tickets may be purchased at St. Anthony's, St. Stephen's, First Parish, and Second Congregational Churches. Dinner and Concert: adults-$20, children-$8, family maximum - $50. Concert only: adults-$12, children- $6. The Market Place is free and open to all.

Proceeds will benefit the Cohasset Appalachia Service Project's 16th annual trip. This year 120 teenage and 55 adult volunteers will travel to Virginia to do repairs and improvements on 25 homes.

Call (781) 383-0345 or visit our website at www.CohassetASP.org for more information about the project.

'Celebrate' at St. Stephen's

On Sunday, March 30 at 2 p.m., the St. Stephen's Players will "take a sentimental journey" as they present "Celebrate," a journey through the music and times of the 20th century. Performing old favorites such as, "Take Me Out To the Ballgame," "Singing in the Rain," and "Sing, Sing, Sing," they will travel through the early years of the past century. Newer "old" favorites include "Rock Around the Clock," "Fun, Fun, Fun," "Celebrate, Good Times," and "I'll Be There For Your" will round out this journey.

"Celebrate" will be performed March 30 in the Walton Rodgers Hall at St. Stephen's Church, 16 Highland Ave. There is no admission charge, but a free-will offering is welcome. For more information, call the church office at 781-383-1083.

National parks of the world

The Community Garden Club of Cohasset will hold its monthly meeting at the Second Congregational Church Bates Hall Tuesday, March 25 at 9 a.m.. Joy Viola, naturalist, photographer, and leader of natural history tours, will present a slide lecture tracing the history of our national parks. In addition, she will show examples of how the park concept has been exported to other nations of the world.

It will be an extremely interesting and informative morning for all who attend and especially so for all those who enjoy the natural beauty of our park system.

Alternatives to invasive plants

On Sunday, March 30, at 2:30 p.m., the Cohasset Garden Club will sponsor a lecture by William E. Brumback at St. Anthony Parish Hall on Summer Street. The lecture will address alternatives to invasive plants that are overtaking and eradicating native plant species indigenous to our area and especially to our wetlands.

As conservation director for the New England Wildflower Society, Brumback has initiated a plant conservation program to protect the region's rare and endangered plants from annihilation and to promote their recovery in the wild. There are currently more than 500 plants that are of conservation concern in New England. Brumback will address major plant conservation and habitat protection challenges before us in the Northeast.

Refreshments will be served. Guests are invited to attend. Admission is free.

Sponsored through the chapter, the winners recognized were Scott Faber of Cohasset High School, Nora Creahan of Hingham High School, Jennifer O'Brien of Weymouth High School, and Erin O'Connell of Whitman-Hanson High School. Unable to attend, but also recognized were Allison Moje of Cohasset High School and Christine Canale of Rockland High School.

The DAR Good Citizen Award is given annually to members of the senior class of accredited high schools. The students are selected by the faulty and voted on by members of the senior class. They must have the qualities of dependability, service, leadership and patriotism. The program is recognized by the National Association Secondary School Principals.

Free 10-week Alpha course

Alpha is a free, 10-week course that has been significant for people all over the world. It is a practical introduction to the Christian faith and Alpha tries to answer the questions:

"What is the point of life?...What happens when we die?...What relevance does Jesus have for my daily life today?...How do we deal with guilt?" and more.

Each week, people meet together for a meal, a talk on topics such as, "Who is Jesus?" and "Why did Jesus die?" and "How can I be sure that Jesus really rose from the dead?" and "Does God still heal today?".

People who take the Alpha course come from many backgrounds and for many reasons. Protestant and Catholic clergy have remarked that Alpha has the greatest impact on the people who don't go to church.

Alpha is for everyone: Catholics, Protestants, atheists and agnostics; those who want to investigate Christianity; those who want to brush up on the basics; and those who feel they've never really "got going" as a Christian.

For more information on Alpha, please call 781-383-6792.

All are welcome to experience the festivities of the Jewish holiday of Purim.

Evan Mehlenbacher will offer insights at a free lecture-workshop.

Insights on spiritual healing workshop

Have you ever wondered:

How Christian Science healing works? If it is specific prayer that heals or just a general state of faith; or how you can bring spiritual healing into your own life?

Evan Mehlenbacher of Easton will discuss answers to these questions and offer insights on the practice of Christian healing at a free lecture-workshop to be given Thursday evening, April 10 at 7:30 in the Minot Room of the Nantasket Clarion Hotel's Conference Center at 45 Hull Shore Drive in Hull.

After earning a B.A. degree in economics from Stanford University, Mehlenbacher worked for several years in his family's farming business in Washington state. Here he saw the effect of prayer at work in his daily life. Before long, people began asking him to pray for them and his public practice of healing through the power of prayer was born.

Mehlenbacher has lectured throughout North America at conventions, conferences, bookstores, colleges, hospitals, Internet events, interdenominational gatherings and churches. He has addressed topics such as, "Spiritual Help You Can Trust" and "A Spiritual Approach to Terrorism," among many others.

Today, he is manager of the Christian Science Board of Lectureship in Boston, a practitioner of spiritual healing and an authorized teacher of Christian Science.

There is no charge for this event which is open to the public. All are welcome.

Police arrested seven in February

February was a very quiet month for the Cohasset Police Department. There were seven arrests, two for Assault & Battery; two for Operating Under the Influence of Liquor; one for Operating with a Suspended License; one for Possession of a Class D Substance; and finally one for Protective Custody.

During the month of February the police department investigated 18 motor vehicle accidents, five of which resulted in personal injury. There were 93 motor vehicle citations issued totaling $5,455 in fines. Additionally, there were 64 parking tickets issued for $1,750 in fines. There were six criminal complaints issued four for Motor Vehicle Violations; one for Assault and Battery, and finally one for Possession of a Controlled Substance, Jackson said.

Also in February the Emergency Dispatch Center received a total of 1,115 calls for police services, of those 115 were Emergency 911 calls.

In the month of February there was two Breaking & Entering of a Business, and one attempted Breaking & Entering of a Business, he said.

Finally in the month of February Officer Jeffrey Treanor became a Certified Child Restraint Technician after successfully completing a 32-hour National Highway Safety Transportation Administration (N.H.T.S.A) course.

Rocker Eddie Money will perform Saturday, March 22 at Plymouth Memorial Hall.

Show me the Money

80s rocker makes tour stop in Plymouth March 22

By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

Twenty-five years after "Baby Hold On" and "Two Tickets to Paradise," Eddie Money is still known as one of the hardest working men in rock 'n' roll. He's also lost none of the genuine hungry-rocker passion that drove him to such ambition in the first place.

That much is evident as Money has recently kicked off the 2003 touring season, which with a hot new band and a milestone adjoining project in the works, once again promises the singer's typical average of some 150 shows a year. Money's current tour makes its only Massachusetts stop this Saturday (March 22) at the 2003 Celebrity Series concerts at Plymouth Memorial Hall.

The show was originally booked as a double-bill with Money and ex-Men At Work singer/guitarist, now solo artist, Colin Hay. Due to Hay's cancellation, his opening slot will be filled by Boston-based duo Jumpin' Juba, which is the part-time project of area blues-folkie singer/guitarist Steve Hurl along with sideman, blues/barrelhouse-style pianist Bruce Ward.

Later this month, Money's tour will touch down for two shows at the Performance Hall of the Renaissance Center in Dickson, Tennessee. The Money band and the Center will salvage the dates by videotaping them for release on VHS and DVD as well as possible future television broadcast. The singer will also make use of the occasion to donate any proceeds from official Eddie Money merchandise on sale to benefit the Elizabeth Glaser Pediatric AIDS Foundation.

"I think it's going to be our latest and greatest piece of work in my usual humble opinion."
Eddie Money

The Foundation is named for the late wife of Money's close L.A. friend and former Starsky & Hutch star Paul Glaser. Elizabeth Glaser passed away from AIDS in 1994 and Paul has also lost a child to the disease and currently is caring for another child stricken by the illness.

Conditioning program gives golfers the edge

By Jeffrey Wright
CORRESPONDENT

When Tiger Woods drove his way onto the golf scene a few years ago, he brought the game a new level of prestige and popularity.

His dominance of the game is so unprecedented that he has influenced change on the way the traditional golf swing is taught. This 'new millennium golf swing', as serious golfers call it, places a lot of tension on the lower spine and emphasis on the use of the upper back muscles as well as the rotation of the hips.

As much as Woods has helped revolutionize the game of golf he is such a good athlete that his influence may be detrimental to older or less athletic golfers who may find it difficult to use this swing to their advantage without getting injured. That's where training and conditioning programs like the one being offered at South Shore Hospital in Weymouth come in to play. When followed closely, these programs can help golf lovers avoid tedious injuries and enjoy a full, healthy golf season.

With the change in swing technique, back problems are becoming practically an epidemic in golf, according to Harry Rose, a professional golf instructor at Needham Golf Club.

"Although these injuries may not have been caused by golfing, playing the game definitely does not help," says Rose.

South Shore Hospital's five-week Golf Conditioning Program is being pitched for "amateur golfers who need to get the kinks out for the current season." The program will focus on stretching and strengthening exercises specific to muscles most used in the golf swing. Meeting twice each week, participants will learn how to condition themselves through various forms of exercise. In addition, a local PGA (Professional Golf Association) pro presents a lecture on the mechanics of the golf swing. The criteria for participation is very broad; amateur golfers of any age can sign up but must be able to perform the given exercises.

While she's not an avid golfer, the course instructor Jen Logan has been working as an exercise physiologist at the hospital since 2000 and has worked in physical therapy since 1996. Currently, Logan is working with a community program in the hospital with those stricken with Parkinson's Disease and arthritis. Logan is about to begin her fourth season of teaching the Golf Conditioning Program — a program she pitched to the hospital three years ago while a graduate student at Northeastern University.

The idea for the program came to Logan when she was working at the Cohasset Golf Club where she noticed more than a few out-of-shape golfers. She centered her research on the mechanics of the swing and also common injury type. The response to the course was good, said Logan, noting her students' average age was somewhere around 50 to 60. In her program, Logan places emphasis on strengthening and she leaves the mechanics of the swing and golf technique to the PGA pro to teach.

There are many muscles used when playing golf and the golf conditioning program works out everything from the neck to your hands. Almost all of the exercises deal with the legs and back in some capacity and just about every one is done in sets of ten. There are exercises for the hamstring, quadriceps, groin, stomach, and shoulder muscles as well as the hips. Since it is very easy to accidentally alter the way a stretch is supposed to be executed the program outlines all the dos and don'ts as well as how long to hold each stretch for.

Free weights are also incorporated into the training sessions. These exercises primarily deal with the shoulders and back as well as the biceps, triceps, and wrists. The exercises for the back are a little more important because they are not muscles that are used as much as the biceps and triceps. These workouts teach golfers to use and strengthen muscles that may be rarely used if at all.

The benefits of the program are many, Logan said. A golfer can improve flexibility of golf-specific muscles, improve strength of muscles used in golf, and increase knowledge of swing mechanics. The program is also beneficial for the cardiovascular system.

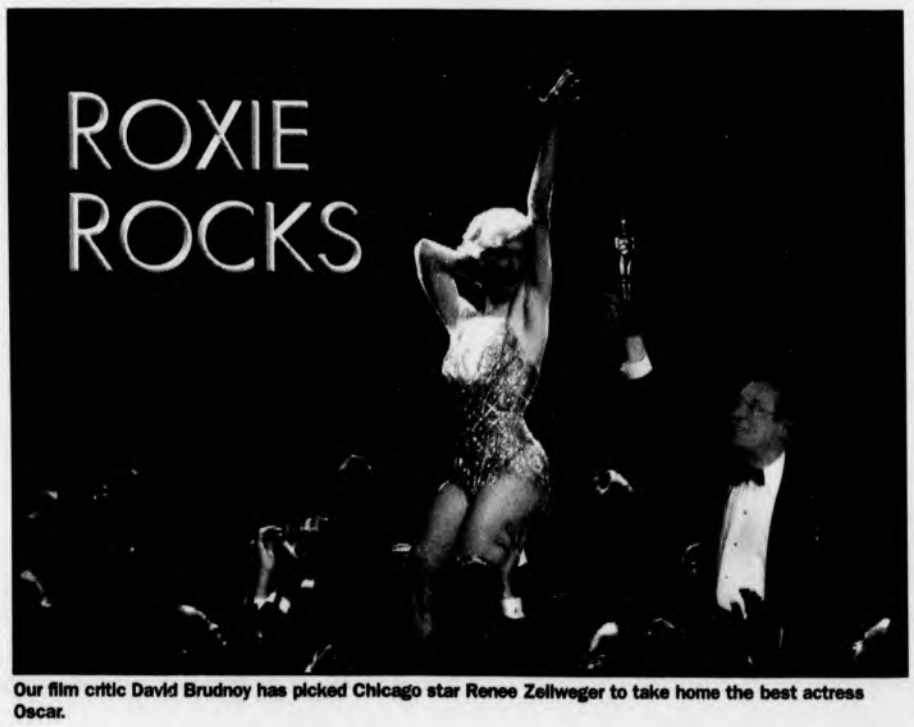
Brudnoy says... Roxie rocks

Our film critic predicts a big night for 'Chicago'

David Brudnoy
CNC Film Critic



Our film critic David Brudnoy has picked Chicago star Renee Zellweger to take home the best actress Oscar.

Richard Gere evidently didn't sufficiently razzle-dazzle 'em — "'em" being members of the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences who nominate the actors and who by now have voted for those to whom the Oscar "goes." Everybody else connected to "Chicago" has been nominated, including the kid who totes the coffee and doughnuts and the other kid who strews rose petals on the ground before the actresses, all three of whom have been nominated. OK, I'm kidding about the kids, but just barely. Not kidding about Gere, shamefully neglected.

"Chicago" is worthy, a pretty pudding of pure pizazz and maybe, if Hollywood's honchos sense a trend in the making, an augur of more filmed musicals to come.

With the Best Picture category, to whom the Oscar "goes," this is a win-win-win-win-lose situation, in my opinion, the "lose," though it might win, being the overwrought "Gangs of New York," historically much of a sham and overacted to a fare-thee-well. "Gangs" is nobody's so-so movie choice; you love it or you do not. I do not. Meticulously conceived and assembled in Rome's Cinecitta studios, accurate to the last detail of costuming, but another instance of a movie that wants to be "of" history but not "in" history. It tells the story of the eponymous gangs and of the anti-draft and anti-black riots in New York City in 1863 but can't resist doing a "Titanic" on it, meaning fiddling with reality to accord with PC verities. Hollywood's servitude to the gods of their ideology is eternal.

"The Hours" is the most impressive film of 2002, to which the Oscar should go but probably won't. "The Lord of the Rings: The Two Towers" is another love-it-or-loathe-it movie; I love it and I'm not a Tolkienite. Forgive me my sins, but I have not read the trilogy, but I'm told by the books' acolytes that it's faithful, given the requisites of movies as opposed to the limitlessness of novels' scope, a compelling adventure saga. "The Pianist" is not just another Holocaust movie, of which we may have had about enough, at least for a while; it's a true story of a man who was not heroic but lucky and plucky and who somehow made it through the torments in Warsaw during the ghastly years of National Socialism's horror. Foot-tappingly fun "Chicago" will likely win here, but this is a good field, save for "Gangs," and I doubt that many moviegoers will be gnashing their teeth, yanking out strands of hair, and angrily furrowing their hard-to-furrow Botoxed brows, no matter who and what comes out on top Sunday.

I'm not going to tire you with a rant about the sheer awfulness of Daniel Day-Lewis's Oscar-nominated performance in "Gangs" — you got the point — but how remarkably fine are his rivals here: Nicholas Cage, who puts everything into any role and here got to be two people, real-life screenwriter Charlie Kaufman and his non-existent brother; Adrien Brody, a stealth candidate in that he's long been admired by folks who watch movies carefully but hasn't had a role that propelled him onto the movieland A-shelf, gets us by the gut and doesn't let go in "The Pianist;" Jack Nicholson — need any prep on this guy? — in "About Schmidt" is so fine, so sober and at the same time nutty; and Michael Caine, in what is undeniably one of his best performances, as a jaded, resourceful reporter in Vietnam in the '50s in "The Quiet American."

The leading actress category is well represented — no complaints here. But the standouts are Nicole Kidman ("The Hours") as Virginia Woolf,

Pan-fried fish fillets

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Fried fish fillets run the gamut from pedestrian to horrible, the coating gummy and tasteless and the fish bland and overcooked. Yet this simple dish cooks in just minutes, takes little preparation, and, when made properly, produces juicy, tender fish encased in a crisp, flavorful coating. What's not to like?

First, the fish. I tested a variety of fillets and found that only the thinnest will do for this recipe. (Thicker fillets such as cod turn out overcooked on the outside and undercooked on the inside.) The best choice turned out to be sole with flounder a distant runner-up. Flounder fillets are a bit too small (about 2 ounces) for this recipe. Sole fillets run 4 to 6 ounces.

The coating consists of three parts: a liquid such as milk or egg, breadcrumbs, and flavorings. I tested egg whites, whole egg, milk, and buttermilk. (The fillets are dipped in the liquid, coated with breadcrumbs, and then pan-fried.) The egg white version was crisp and clean, the milk was good but not quite as clean tasting, the whole egg was too rich, and the buttermilk added a tang that was unwelcome. I also determined that seasoning the fillets directly was preferable to letting the coating do all of the work.

For the breadcrumbs, I tried a flour/cornmeal coating, fresh breadcrumbs, and dry breadcrumbs all of which were fried in an olive oil/ butter combination. The flour/cornmeal was gummy and the least flavorful, the fresh breadcrumbs tasted like a bad church supper stuffing, and the dry breadcrumbs were the crunchiest. adhered well, browned nicely and contributed just the right amount of buttery breadcrumb flavor. Next, I tasted flavor additions to the breadcrumbs. I liked the addition of chopped parsley and/or chives since their flavor complements the breaded fillets. For 1 1/2 cups breadcrumbs (enough for eight fillets) I used 4 tablespoons of chopped fresh herbs. I tried dried thyme but it was overpowering so stick with fresh parsley or chives. Next, I experimented with Parmesan cheese but it simply interfered with the flavor of the fish. Lemon zest was an interesting addition but I quickly found that I needed a lot of zest to get any lemon flavor. When I added enough zest, it then turned bitter so I simply squeezed fresh lemon juice over the fillets after cooking.

Finally, I wanted to confirm the cooking technique. A combination of butter and oil was my first choice but I also tested peanut oil (too much flavor) and canola oil (flavorless and not crispy). Using the butter/olive oil combination and a 12-inch skillet, I found that 8 fillets could be cooked in three batches, 60 to 90 seconds per side. I found that I needed to add an additional tablespoon each of butter and olive oil by the third batch. For best results the heat should be medium-high. If the fish cooks at low heat the fillets become oily and soggy. At high heat the butter burns. These quick-fried fillets are great served with a salad, bread, and glass of wine.

PAN FRIED FISH FILLETS

Note that you should use store-bought dried breadcrumbs, not fresh breadcrumbs. Also, be sure to purchase unflavored crumbs since many brands also include herbs and seasonings.

1 1/2 cups dry, unflavored, store-bought breadcrumbs
1 teaspoon salt plus additional salt for seasoning the fish fillets
1/2 teaspoon freshly ground black pepper plus additional for seasoning the fish fillets
4 tablespoons flat parsley or chives or a combination of both, chopped fine
2 egg whites
8 very thin fish fillets such as sole, about 4 to 6 ounces each
3 tablespoons olive oil
3 tablespoons unsalted butter
Lemon wedges for serving

1. In a shallow bowl or pie plate add the breadcrumbs, salt, pepper, and chopped parsley/chives. Stir with a fork to combine well. Whisk the egg whites in another shallow bowl or pie plate until slightly foamy. Season the fish fillets lightly with salt and pepper. Line a baking sheet with waxed paper.

2. Heat a heavy-duty 12-inch skillet over medium high heat. One at a time dip the fish fillets first into the egg whites and then the breadcrumb mixture. For best results flip the fish a couple of times in the crumbs pressing down to adhere the coating. Set aside in a single layer on the prepared baking sheet.

3. Place two tablespoons each of olive oil and butter in the skillet. Swirl to coat the bottom of the pan. The butter will melt and foam very quickly at this point. Once the butter has stopped foaming place 3 fillets (or as many as you can fit in a single layer), in the skillet. Cook for 60 to 90 seconds or until dark golden brown. With a large spatula turn the fillets and cook on the other side until dark golden brown. Remove and place on a warm platter. Repeat with the rest of the fillets adding the additional tablespoon olive oil and butter before cooking the third batch of fillets. Serve immediately.

Serves four to six.

"This DVD project will be one of the most important we've done in a long time," said Money by phone from the Nashville area, not far from the scene of the videotape shoot later this month.

"I think it's going to be our latest and greatest piece of work in my usual humble opinion. I recently quit smoking after many years, and as a result, I've got a lot more range and power in my voice than I've had in a long time. I'm also working with a fresh new band that I think is the best I've had in quite awhile. I still have my longtime guitarist, Tommy Girvin, who's been with me from the beginning. But the rest of the band is all new players who are just fantastic and I think the audience is really going to get into."

"The DVD shoot will all be very professionally done. I tend to be a perfectionist in my work. I've always tried to make my records sound as much like a live show as possible, and by the same token, recreate the original studio sound as much as possible onstage as well," Money said.

Money, who just turned 53, speaks in a distinct and affable, second-or third-generation New York-Irish accent, which gives him a unique ability to converse with total strangers such as interviewers like he's known them forever. Born Eddie Mahoney in Brooklyn, the singer is also well-known for having been originally primed to follow in his father's and brothers' career footsteps as a New York City police trainee. Money/Mahoney, of course, chose rock 'n' roll instead.

The singer's other chart hits through the late 1970s and 80s include "I Wanna Go Back," "Shakin'," "Take Me Home Tonight" (a duet with girl group legend Ronnie Spector), "Think I'm In Love" and numerous others.

Money said that while he has new music to play, he understands his fans want to hear the hits that made him a legend.

"I understand that for an artist of my caliber, who's been doing this for as long as I have and been lucky enough to have as many chart records, people tend to not want to hear too much off my new music, though I'm doing some of that," he said. "My fans are older, and they spend more time and money these days going to Ace Hardware to buy lawn sprinklers than buying new records. But my show has always been about how I present myself onstage. And the current show is electrifying. My voice sounds great, the band's playing good, we're having a great time."

Eddie Money will perform Saturday, March 22 at 7:30 p.m. at Plymouth Memorial Hall in Plymouth Center. For tickets go to Ticketweb.com, call 866-468-7619, visit Loretta LaRoche & Company at 50 Court Street (Route 3A), or at the hall on the night of the performance.

"You can be as strong as possible," said Logan, "but if you are not in shape it can affect your golf technique." "To get ready to do eighteen holes, you need to get ready to play just like any other sport," she says.

One of Logan's students, Don Baltucci of Weymouth couldn't agree more. Baltucci said he was out of shape and a little overweight before embarking on the program last year. He credits the class for getting him in better shape for the links and helping him hit "the ball twenty yards farther than before." And although Baltucci has never suffered a golf-related injury, he said the program really helped improve his reach and flexibility.

Anna Marie Elkhill is another golf conditioning student, who said she would definitely recommend the curriculum because of the way it improved her flexibility. Playing twice a week she said that the exercise regime made her more aware of how to prepare for playing. The one drawback of the program is the fact that the exercises are very time consuming, considering that eighteen holes of golf takes about five hours, if you are lucky. Ms. Elkhill admitted to neglecting some of the exercises.

"You have to spend 45 minutes on them. Normal golfers would not have time," she said.

Rose also raised concerns about the time involved in exercising. "Golf is a five or six hour endeavor. Working on your swing and all these exercises may leave you no time for anything else."

Which is one reason the course is scheduled to take place before the golf season gets in full swing.

In order to sign up for the golf conditioning program pre-registration is required. A completed golf questionnaire and physician clearance form is required for participation. Jennifer Logan can be contacted at the Outpatient Rehabilitation Center at South Shore Hospital at (781) 340-8177 for an application form. The program begins on March 31.

The harbingers of spring

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

As the last few days of winter pass quickly by, the long-awaited signs of spring are finally beginning to appear.

Beckoned forth by the cheerful melodies of the Carolina wrens, I rambled through the snow-covered landscape on a misty Sunday morning to breathe in the fresh, crisp air and witness the sights and sounds of springtime. Despite the wintry setting, hints of spring were to be found around every corner, offering assurances that all the beauty nestled beneath the crusty cover of snow would soon burst forth.

The intensity and warmth of the late winter sun gradually dissipated the morning haze as brilliant sunshine beamed down on the frozen landscape, slowly melting the layers of snow and ice. Several large patches of bare ground appeared in the sunnier portions of my landscape as the day progressed, revealing clusters of early springtime miracles hidden beneath the soggy leaf litter. The telltale tips of crocuses, snowdrops, and dwarf iris reticulata foliage have started to push their way up through the soft, moist earth and with several days of milder temperatures in the forecast, their colorful blossoms may come into bloom by week's end.

In the damp, wetlands meadow, the silvery, silken catkins of the Japanese fantail willow have fully emerged, its contorted branches twisting and turning to form fascinating curlicues. When cut and dried, these unique spiraling, curved stems produce delightful artistic decorations perfect for vases and floral arrangements. Stem cuttings taken during early spring root easily in water or moist sand and once established grow quickly in moisture-retentive soils into a fascinating multi-stemmed tree. Nearby, a dense stand of wild pussy willows grows along the brook. In another week or two, their small, steel gray-colored catkins will be revealed, but for the present, their bare branches host flocks of returning red-winged blackbirds whose noisy chatter drowns out the peaceful sounds of the babbling brook beneath their canopy.

Passing through my garden arbor, I was delighted to discover the vibrant yellow, fringed blossoms of the witch hazel, Hamamelis 'Arnold Promise' had finally burst into bloom. Its dense clusters of delicate ribbons were dazzling as the slanted rays of the afternoon sun illuminated its spidery blossoms covered with sparkling drops of moisture. Although its flowers often appear during February, this season's chilly temperatures delayed their opening. Planted many seasons ago as a small, bare-root, mail order sapling, this vase-shaped shrub has been pruned and nurtured over the years and has gradually matured into a handsome 15-foot tree. From my window, the tree resembles a frilly, lemon chiffon cloud, and provides an exquisite addition to a shady corner alongside my water garden against a backdrop of deep evergreen foliage provided by a cedar tree.

The intensity and warmth of the late winter sun gradually dissipated the morning haze as brilliant sunshine beamed down on the frozen landscape, slowly melting the layers of snow and ice.

There are several desirable cultivars of witch hazels (Hamamelis spp.) currently available in the nursery trade, each offering unique, colorful flowers for several weeks when little else is in bloom during late February and March. Cold weather causes the spidery petals to close tightly and when temperatures moderate, the clusters unfurl once again. The unusual blossoms of the majority of witch hazels are extremely fragrant. Tolerant of a wide range of growing conditions, ideal culture includes provision of a moisture-retentive but well-drained soil in an area of full sun to half shade. In addition to the early, persistent, fragrant blossoms, these handsome shrubs display attractive leaves during the growing season which culminate in a dazzling fall display of multicolored autumn foliage.

Many of these witch hazels, like the cultivar H. 'Arnold Promise' which was developed at the Arnold Arboretum, are the result of cross-pollinating Japanese (H. japonica) and Chinese (H. mollis) varieties. The deep, coppery-red flowers of Hamamelis 'Diane' are a bold contrast to the lemon yellow blossoms of 'Arnold Promise.' H. 'Pallida', a Cary Award winner, displays especially large, sulfur-yellow blooms. It should be noted that our native witch hazel, H. virginiana, which is likely to be found growing in moist woodlands or streamside, is a fast-growing shrub with yellow fall foliage and yellow flowers that appear in autumn unlike those of the varieties derived from Asian species. Unfortunately, witch hazels are not commonly grown, most likely because their unique blossoms have departed by the time most gardeners' make their first spring pilgrimages to their local nurseries.

Every year, no matter what Mother Nature provides outdoors, spring arrives in all its glory when the Massachusetts Horticultural Society presents the New England Spring Flower Show at the Bayside Expo. The welcome sights, sounds and smells of spring flourish in the glorious landscapes and floral displays. This year's exhibition, which runs through Sunday, March 23, features its usual array of magnificent flowering trees and shrubs, handsome hostas, cheerful daffodils, tulips and crocuses, colorful primroses, and floral designs. Many of the gardens offer peaceful patio settings enhanced by creative water features. A spectacular display of massive holly trees covered with dense clusters of fruit and underplanted with masses of white squill (Scilla) and checkered lilies (Fritillaria meleagris) is highlighted by a towering waterfall. Many newer perennial introductions are beautifully arranged in tranquil garden designs. Breathtaking stands of elegant deep blue delphiniums appear throughout this year's show. In addition to the lovely gardens and floral displays, informative lectures, workshops and an extensive marketplace offer a complete horticultural experience that is sure to create an overwhelming sense that springtime is imminent.

SMART EARPLUGS

Researchers have invented a tiny, smart earplug that could make noisy environments easier on the ears. Consisting of a form-fitted earpiece, digital signal processor, speaker, and two microphones, the Personal Active Radio/Audio Terminal (PARAT) filters out human voices from the background din and makes conversation possible in previously hostile environments. In quiet conditions, the earplug "opens up" so that the wearer can hear normally. Once the device's external microphone picks up significant outside noise, however, its main processor begins to filter incoming signals. Programmed to recognize sounds that occur in the unique spectrum of the human voice, the device relays these (but not other noise) to a miniature speaker, which is monitored for loud sound.

One of the most important things we do at FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER is help folks understand how to protect their hearing. We also want to help patients comprehend their hearing impairments and help them become aware of the products available today to improve their lives. It's important to us that they enjoy the world in which they live, and we look forward to servicing the individual needs of everyone who comes to us for care. Can we help you? Call us at 781-337-1144, or stop by 534 Main Street (Rte. 18), across from the Stetson Bldg. in Weymouth.

P.S. Smart earplugs hold out the promise to employees who must communicate in noisy environments.

Brudnoy says... Roxie rocks and Julianne Moore ("Far From Heaven") as a 1950s wife and mother watching her husband turn into something she never could have imagined — gay. And not one negative syllable out of my mouth about the supporting actress nominees except that I'm not sure Kathy Bates' audaciously full frontality in "About Schmidt," Queen Latifah's tough jail matron in "Chicago," Meryl Streep's writer going googoo over a weird orchid lover in "Adaptation," and Catherine Zeta-Jones kicking up a mighty storm of joyful dance and song in "Chicago" quite rise to the brilliance of Julianne Moore in "The Hours." No, I'm not related to her — Brudnoy is, I grant, Old French for "Moore" — but I yearn to spend an hour interviewing her.

Best Supporting Actor nominees are splendid though Chris Cooper, grungy and cantankerous in "Adaptation," seems to me the lesser of a fine lot. Ed Harris goes under with AIDS in "The Hours" in (pardon the cliché) a heart-rending performance, Paul Newman incarnates a tough but also sentimental crime boss in "The Road to Perdition," John C. Reilly, another actor whom everybody admires but nobody dashes out the door in a blizzard to see on screen, is sensational as the cuckolded husband in "Chicago," a true Mr. Celophane, and Christopher Walken is — boy, is he ever — glorious to watch as the wise but downtrodden dad to the precocious little con artist son in "Catch Me If You Can." And lest you think that because I'm not googly about "Gangs of New York" and loathed "Titanic," I therefore have a hair across a tender spot regarding Leonardo Di Caprio, know this: He's flawless in "Catch Me If You Can" and should have snagged a Best Actor nod for that instead of Day-Lewis, his "Gangs" co-star.

'Chicago' on fire; Moore's the pity

Here's my yearly fall-flat-on-my-face predictions; fortunately, I'm not your broker or you would be broke.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 19

Planetary action continues to rate high. Today the Libra moon forms harmonious contacts to Neptune, Pluto, Venus and Saturn. In addition, Venus, the planetary ruler of Libra, prepares to form a flowing 120-degree contact to Saturn. That means that the time is ideal for meeting people, beginning important alliances or strengthening key relationships. If you've been experiencing problems with another, work things out, clear the air and start anew. This influence also favors making important promises and commitments to others. At 10:02 p.m. the moon aligns with Saturn and becomes inactive.

THURSDAY, MARCH 20

Storm clouds move in again at 9:38 a.m., when the moon enters serious Scorpio. Pluto, the planetary ruler of Scorpio, is slowing its rate of motion and preparing for retrograde travel. The next couple of days can be very intense and challenging. Others may be temperamental and difficult to get along with. Don't rock the boat. Stay busy with work projects. The good news is that the Vernal Equinox arrives at 8:00 p.m., when the sun enters Aries.

FRIDAY, MARCH 21

A barrage of planetary activity can make for a rough day. Wake up in a good mood. Don't allow anyone or anything to throw you off course. Take on a full work agenda. You can be most productive. Influences are especially favorable for making repairs, redoing and renovating, problem-solving. You can cut through obstacles and get to the heart of a matter. Mercury enters Aries at 7:16 a.m., remaining there until April 5. Venus aligns with Saturn at 1:31 p.m., and the sun with Mercury at 6:35 p.m. The moon travels in Scorpio, active until 11:30 p.m.

SATURDAY, MARCH 22

The moon enters Sagittarius at 10:33 a.m. and aligns with Uranus at 11:36 a.m., making for a hectic morning. Expect the unexpected. Avoid rigid time schedules. The planet Pluto has a major impact on this day, because Pluto turns retrograde twelve minutes after midnight. Spend time alone this weekend. Instead of trying to change others or external situations, look within, change your thinking and find a new course of action for yourself.

SUNDAY, MARCH 23

Yesterday's planetary influences affect today as well. The planet Pluto begins retrograde travel at 12:12 a.m., 20-degrees Sagittarius. The Sagittarius moon aligns with Pluto at 8:19 p.m. Pluto represents change and transformation. It brings a time to look within and change the areas of your life that aren't working. Start new programs to help you break bad habits; set new personal goals.

MONDAY, MARCH 24

This morning is great for relaxing, vacationing; however, if you have to get back to work or school, it can be difficult. The Sagittarius moon becomes inactive at 6:58 a.m. Mercury prepares to align with Jupiter, generating a social, optimistic mood. To avoid spinning your wheels, carefully organize your time and stick to your game plan. At 1:48 p.m. the green light for new beginnings goes on. At this time the moon enters industrious Capricorn. The last quarter phase of the moon occurs at 8:51 p.m. This moon will decrease in light until April 1, when the new moon culminates.

TUESDAY, MARCH 25

Sign contracts, make long-range plans, promote new ideas before 9:27 a.m., when Mercury forms a harmonious 120-degree contact to Jupiter. The moon continues to travel in practical Capricorn, active until 1:16 p.m., when it aligns with Mars. Plan to get a lot accomplished today; tackle jobs you've been putting off, fulfill promises, handle responsibilities.

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 26

The moon continues to travel in ambitious Capricorn today; however, it is inactive until 7:51 p.m. That means that this is a day to finish projects already begun rather than starting new ones. Get your ducks in line so that you are ready to launch ventures tomorrow and Friday. Planetary influences turn around completely at 7:51 p.m., when the moon enters adventurous Aquarius.

THURSDAY, MARCH 27

A flurry of planetary alignments in the next few days makes for an interesting period. You can be most successful, if you plan to initiate new endeavors in your business or personal life. An Aquarius moon today and tomorrow makes this period particularly favorable for meeting people and starting professional or romantic relationships. A harmonious alignment of Mercury-Neptune stimulates intuition and inspires creative thinking. Venus moves into Pisces at 1:14 p.m., remaining there until April 21. Don't be a hermit tonight. An applying alignment of Venus-Uranus promises an exciting evening.

FRIDAY, MARCH 28

Venus and Uranus conjoin at 7:43 a.m., 1-degree Pisces. In addition, the Aquarius moon interacts with Pluto. Be willing to experiment with new ideas, be open to new experiences, take a risk. The moon aligns with Saturn at 3:27 p.m. and becomes inactive. A 90-degree alignment of Mercury and Mars urges you to slow down, keep it light, enjoy the moment. In addition, an applying alignment of the sun and Jupiter sets for the stage for fun and games, late-night partying.

Issues to take center stage

Short warrant is really packed

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Citizens at Annual Town Meeting on Saturday will vote on everything from a $350,000 general override to a $60,000 school bus to an $800,000 project to improve the town's police and fire station.

They'll also decide on a few zoning amendments and even vote on expanding the town's smoking bylaw to include workplaces and outdoor patios at restaurants.

The meeting begins at 10 a.m. in the High School Gymnasium. Town Moderator George Marlette said he expects a relatively quick meeting. "We've had four articles indefinitely postponed so there's only 21 articles. It's the shortest warrant I've seen in a long time," he said.

Marlette said he foresees no trouble reaching a quorum of 100 residents. If the meeting is close to concluding come lunchtime, he plans to continue straight through. Otherwise Marlette will break for 45 minutes.

The meeting will include updates from the Sewer Commission, the School Building Committee and the Growth and Development Committee, as well from Ralph Dormitzer, who will speak about the proposed new runway at Logan Airport.

No, the prom isn't this weekend. But the conversation right after lunch at the high school gym on Monday where a handful of boys were talking about being fitted for tuxes could have fooled anyone who didn't know better.

In a show of school spirit a dozen or so Cohasset High School boys have signed up to compete in the first-ever "Mr. Skipper" contest Friday night. Mr. Skipper Night is a four-part, all-male beauty pageant that will feature the guys in tuxedos, beach wear, a talent contest, and answering a question.

There is a prom connection, according to Maura O'Brien, one of the student organizers, in that proceeds from the ticket sales for the event will help offset the cost of the prom.

"Girls wearing gowns will escort the guys onto the stage," O'Brien said.

She explained the questions, which are being drafted by a group of girls, will be drawn randomly for the contestants.

"This is the first time it's being done and I thought I'd give it a whirl."
— Tom Anderson, contestant

Although Dan Roth, a junior, said he was "peer-pressured" into competing, he thought the event would be fun.

Ryan Tufts, a junior, was far less modest about his reason for participating.

"I'm the sexiest man alive," he said with a grin.

Child seat safety program underway

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

At just three months old, Sean Newcomb had no idea Monday about the effort underway to ensure his safety when he rides in the backseat of his family's car.

But his mother, Michelle, knows it's critical that little Sean is protected. So she contacted the Cohasset Police Department about proper installation of his infant car seat.

Officer Jeffrey Treanor recently completed a certification course in proper installation of child safety constraints in motor vehicles.

Most parents buy a car seat for a child, read the directions, install it in the back seat, and then drive around thinking their youngster is adequately protected. However, many of those parents, who no doubt have the best of intentions, are mistaken. The sad fact is that 90 percent of child restraints in Massachusetts

Wastewater woes still hound Avalon

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

The Water Commission and the Planning Board presented Monday night what could be the strongest argument yet for denying AvalonBay Estates a comprehensive permit, saying wastewater from the developer's proposed 200-unit apartment complex on Route 3A would dump into the Lily Pond watershed and threaten the town's drinking water.

Town Counsel Paul DeRensis told the Zoning Board of Appeals it should deny the permit because Avalon's wastewater plan would violate state regulations and does not adhere to generally accepted standards. DeRensis referenced the findings of the Norfolk Ram Group, the engineering firm contracted by the Water Commission that has studied the flow of surface and groundwater on the site.

"The legal consequences of it are that this project is dead on arrival."
— Town Counsel Paul DeRensis

In a lengthy PowerPoint presentation, DeRensis outlined the positions of both the Water Commission and the Planning Board with respect to Avalon. The burden is on Avalon, he said, to prove that its wastewater plan and other aspects of its proposal are adequate.

Avalon representatives said little except that they wanted to time to review what was presented.

Arguing for the Water Commission, DeRensis said Avalon's wastewater plan makes it ineligible for funding as a low or moderate income subsidized housing development. Also, he said, it would violate the town's wetlands bylaw by discharging material that may degrade water

Klimko trial is rescheduled

The trial of school business manager Ivan Klimko has been rescheduled to April 29 at 9 a.m. in Hingham District Court.

Klimko is charged with assault and battery after an alleged dispute with his wife in November. The trial was initially set to begin March 21.

Klimko was originally charged with attempted murder in addition to assault because his wife told police he threatened to kill her. That charge was dropped by the District Attorney's office in December due to lack of evidence.

Accreditation at CHS expected to continue

The New England Association of Schools and Colleges has issued its 10-year accreditation review of Cohasset Middle High School. Principal Michael Jones said he expected the association would vote this week to continue accreditation.

"It's really the result of the community supporting the schools over the years, the excellent staff that we have and certainly the hard work of the students," said Jones.

The association will highlight certain recommendations in its review when it issues accreditation. The Middle High School has five years to respond to the suggestions.

The accreditation review is a public document and will be available on the school web site and in the town library, Jones said.

Librarian will not be eliminated

The Mariner incorrectly reported two weeks ago in an article entitled "Aides to get the ax" that if the general override failed, a librarian could potentially be cut at the elementary school level. School Committee members said last week that no such cut was being considered.

Moratorium on 40B appeals called for

In their fight to reform Chapter 40B, the state's affordable housing law, Sen. Bob Hedlund, R-Weymouth, and Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, have called for a moratorium on a developer's right to appeal to the state when a local zoning board rejects a comprehensive permit application. The plan is aimed at protecting communities that are currently facing 40B applications until reforms can be enacted.

Legislators have agreed to delay debating changes to Chapter 40B until May 31, when a new task force organized by Gov. Romney is scheduled to have completed its review of the law. Hedlund has criticized the task force, saying it is "heavily weighted with people who opposed 40B reform."

Callahan's contract will not be renewed

Superintendent Edward Malvey announced last Thursday that the contract of Deer Hill Principal Paul Callahan will not be renewed for next school year. Callahan has served as a principal in Cohasset's school system for seven years.

Malvey pointed to issues surrounding curriculum, instructional leadership and the restructuring of elementary school grades as reasons for the decision. "I think it's time for a change in the leadership and we need to move forward," he said.

Chairman Rick Flynn said the School Committee supported the decision, but he complimented Callahan for his service. "Paul has done a good job in his seven years and we wish him well going forward in his future endeavors," Flynn said.

Malvey said he is forming an interviewing committee to assist in the process of hiring a new principal.

Regional school payment could rise

If Gov. Mitt Romney's budget is approved, the town's payments for membership in the South Shore Regional School District will rise $10,000 in fiscal year 2004, from $79,000 to $89,000.

Other towns in the district will see far more drastic increases or decreases in their payments. Scituate would pay an additional $62,000, a 14 percent increase; and Norwell would pay $94,000 more, a 70 percent increase. Whitman, however, would pay $481,000 less, a 41 percent drop from this year. Hanson would pay $75,000 less, a 18.5 percent decrease.

Straits Pond midge control

Per approval of Cohasset and Hull's conservation commissions, a pesticide application will be made to Straits Pond April 8, at 9 a.m. weather permitting. If weather problems delay the application, the spraying will be scheduled on the next appropriate day.

The application is to be done by boat. The product to be applied is Abate. The active ingredient in the product is Temephos, an Organophosphate, which is in a sand granule of fine to medium beach sand. The pests to be controlled are Chironomid Midges.

Application will be to the surface of the pond. Sand granules and boat application are being used to ensure that the pesticide goes to the bottom and that there will be no pesticide drift.

If there are any questions or concerns, call the Hull Board of Health at 781-925-2224.

Election supper at Beechwood

The Annual Election Supper, a springtime tradition, will be held at the Beechwood Congregational Church on Church Street.. Candidates and voters are invited to get together for dinner on Thursday, March 27 at 6:30 p.m.. Dinner will include stuffed chicken, peas and carrots, cranberry sauce, rolls, mashed potatoes, cake and ice cream as well as beverages. Before dinner, all candidates will be introduced. Tickets are $8 for adults and $4 for children. Reserve your tickets by calling 781-383-1298.

Open burning season underway

Cohasset residents may obtain permits on a daily basis from through May 1, for open burning. Permits may be obtained by calling the Fire Department Dispatch, Center at 781-383-0260 between the hours of 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. Permits are valid for one day only.

Burning may be conducted during periods of good atmospheric ventilation and must not cause a nuisance. Adverse weather conditions (wind and drought) will impact permit issuance. Burning hours are from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. on days permits are issued. Decisions to issue permits are made daily at 9 a.m. Persons calling for permits before that hour will be advised to call back.

Open burning permits are issued for the disposal of brush, cane, driftwood and forestry debris. Burning shall be conducted on land proximate to the place of generation. Burning shall be conducted at a distance greater than 75 feet from any dwelling. Select a safe area with no ground cover. While burning the fire must be attended until completely extinguished. Have a water hose rake and shovel nearby for fire control.

Town opposes proposed new local aid formula

Would grant up to $3,000 for each occupancy permit

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Town officials are opposing a new plan from Governor Mitt Romney that would award $50 million of local aid in fiscal year 2005 to communities that create new housing.

Under Romney's proposal, cities and towns would receive the money based on the number of occupancy permits issued during fiscal year 2004. As much as $3,000 would be granted for each occupancy permit issued. Occupancy permits for regular housing and "affordable" housing would be rewarded equally.

Funding for Romney's plan would come as part of the phase out of the $293 million Transitional Mitigation fund, provided temporarily in Romney's fiscal year 2004 budget to mitigate the effects of cuts made in other areas of local aid, such as Chapter 70 and additional assistance. Cohasset is set to receive more than $450,000 from the Transitional Mitigation fund in fiscal year 2004.

Town Manager Mark Haddad and Selectmen sent a letter last week to local state legislators asking them to fight Romney's local aid proposal.

"The Board of Selectmen and I are adamantly opposed to this type of formula to distribute local aid in the future," Haddad wrote in the letter. "In order for the Town to recoup the $400,000, we would have to issue 133 occupancy permits in a year's time. Given the fact that the Town only issues between 15 and 25 new occupancy permits in a year, this is an unattainable goal. Under this program, the town would surely lose a substantial amount of aid."

"Under this program, the town would surely lose a substantial amount of aid."

— Town Manager Mark Haddad

According to Romney's press office, the town would not be expected to replace all of its Transitional Mitigation funding through the occupancy permit program. The new program would only phase out $50 million of the fund statewide.

Regardless, Haddad said, the plan would not benefit the town. "It doesn't make sense for towns like Cohasset," he said. "It's impossible for us to compete with bigger towns with more buildable land."

"Even if the town were to begin soliciting proposals for projects at this time, it is highly unlikely that they would be permitted and completed and ready for occupancy in a year's time when this program would take effect," Haddad wrote in his letter.

Sen. Bob Hedlund, R-Weymouth, said Romney's plan was an attempt to increase the state's housing stock using a "one-size-fits-all" strategy. He said some communities would be left out, particularly those that had recently allowed large developments built under Chapter 40B, the state's affordable housing law.

"I don't like it," Hedlund said. "What about the communities that have made strides in community housing? In a sense, they're being penalized. It's another little tinker around the edges of (Chapter) 40B when we need a top to bottom reform of the law."

Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, said the formula was part of Romney's larger plan to "incentivize" local aid. But Bradley said communities shouldn't have to make use of incentives to build their local aid back to its fiscal year 2004 level. He said incentives should only come in addition to a level funded local aid package.

Schools review emergency plan

Letter going out to parents

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Superintendent of Schools Edward Malvey is working with local public safety officials to improve the school system's emergency plan in the event of a chemical, biological or nuclear terrorist attack.

After meeting with school administrators, the town civil defense director and the chiefs of the police and fire departments early last week, Malvey announced at the School Committee meeting on Thursday that he would send a letter to parents outlining the current emergency plan. He said he had received several phone calls from worried parents who wondered about the details of the plan.

Though Malvey does not see Cohasset as a prime target for terrorism, he said he understood the potential for nuclear, chemical and biological attacks to spread over large areas and the increasing danger that such attacks could occur in response to the war with Iraq.

Under the current emergency plan, in the event of an attack, Cohasset schools would initially go into a "lockdown situation," where windows and doors would be locked and ventilation and heating systems would be shut down to protect against any airborne threat. Malvey said safety officials are still investigating whether plastic and tape would be necessary to help seal the buildings.

Parents should not rush to the schools to find their children in the event of an emergency, Malvey said. Once it was considered safe, police would organize a controlled release of students from each school. Potential "neutral pickup sites" are being looked into for scenarios that might require immediate evacuation of the schools.

"We're going into that type of detail," said Malvey. "It's new to us. We think we're on top of it. We're developing the specific protocols."

Malvey cautioned parents against flooding the schools with phone calls in an emergency because phone lines would need to remain open to allow school officials to contact public safety officials. He said he would use media outlets to stay in touch with parents.

Malvey hopes to complete his review of the school emergency plan in the coming weeks. "We're moving on it as quickly as we can," he said. "We hope it's just an exercise that we never have to pull out and implement."

Sun won't rise on van policy

No rides for residents of for-profit facilities

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Denise Baxter, executive director of Sunrise Assisted Living, is upset by the Council on Elder Affairs' policy to not provide transportation for residents of assisted living facilities.

In early February, the CEA denied a request from a woman living at Sunrise who needed a ride to a medical appointment in Weymouth. Sunrise does have its own van but, according to Baxter, it could not accommodate the woman at the time she needed transportation.

Baxter wrote a letter on Feb. 15 to CEA Chairman Rev. Gary Ritts requesting an explanation for the decision.

According to CEA director Kathy Bryanton, the COEA gives rides to seniors who live in homes or at Harborview Apartments at 60 Elm St., the housing complex for the elderly run by the Housing Authority. "We do not provide transportation to units that are for-profit, as in the case of Sunrise" or other assisted living facilities or nursing homes, she said in an interview this week.

Bryanton said expanding the CEA's van service to include for-profit senior living facilities would not fit within the council's budget and would result in added liability.

"Our volunteers are trained to support people who are living at home and that's what this system is set up to do," said Bryanton. "This would be setting a different precedent."

Cohasset is not the only town to have adopted such a policy regarding senior transportation. The Council on Aging in Weymouth and the Department of Elder Services in Hingham both said they do not provide rides to seniors in assisted living facilities that have their own vans.

"Most Councils on Aging have limited budgets with limited resources so it makes it hard to expand," said Sandra Kent, director of Hingham's senior services. "People think it just takes a driver to pick them up. But it takes the dispatcher to take the calls, the extra scheduling, et cetera, et cetera."

Bryanton said the practice is standard throughout the South Shore: because for-profit senior living facilities can afford to provide their own transportation, they are excluded from a town's elderly van service.

But Baxter called the Cohasset CEA's policy "discriminatory." "I've worked in other towns and the Council on Aging has served every senior in the community. They served wherever the need was," she said. "I've never seen this. I don't get it."

Baxter said it was the first time in two years that a Sunrise resident had requested van service from the town and she was surprised the CEA did not make an exception to its policy.

"We can't (make an exception) because it sets a precedent," said Bryanton. She added that residents of Sunrise were eligible for transportation through the MBTA's service for the elderly, "The Ride."

Absentee ballots are now available

Absentee ballots for the Annual Town Election on April 5, are now available at the Town Clerk's office. Absentee voting may be done during normal office hours until noontime on Friday, April 4, at which time the office will be closed to prepare for the election. You may vote absentee for the following reasons only:

1. Absence from the town during the hours the polls is open.
2. Physical disability.
3. Religious beliefs, which prevent voting at the polls on Election Day.

The applicant must request an absentee ballot. Applications are available in the Town Clerk's office or a written, signed request can be sent by mail, or hand delivered by the voter or any other person. The application should include the legal voting address of the voter, where the ballot is to be mailed, and the signature of the applicant.

A family member of a person qualified to vote by absentee ballot may apply on behalf of such voter. The applicant shall state his or her relationship to the absentee voter; sign the application under the pains and penalties of perjury and mail or hand deliver the application to the clerk's office. Absentee ballots must be mailed to the voter. Returned ballots should be mailed or can be delivered by an immediate member of the family to the Town Clerk's office by April 5, to be counted.

If you are permanently physically disabled and cannot cast your vote at the polling place, you may file a letter from your physician with your town clerk, stating that you are permanently unable to cast your vote at the polling place because of physical disability. A completed application for an absentee ballot for you to sign and return will be mailed to you by the town clerk at least 28 days before every primary and election.

We'll make you smile.

IT RUNS IN THE FAMILY

Picking up where she left off in 2002, former Cohasset High girls' lacrosse standout Jackie Kahn has begun the 2003 season on a scoring streak for Swarthmore College in Swarthmore, Penn.. In the Garnet Tide's first four games, Jackie has 21 goals and two assists to lead the Centennial Conference in goals per game and is among the NCAA Division 3 leaders in the category. Jackie's team is 3-1 on the season, in part due to her heroics. In the opener against Whittier, she scored five in an 11-9 victory. On Sunday, she had six goals in a come-from-behind 9-8 overtime win against Vassar, including the tying goal with 34 seconds left in regulation. She was named to the Seven Sisters All-Tournament team on Sunday, in recognition of her 15 goals and two assists in that event. Jackie graduated from Cohasset High in 2001, where she co-captained the Lady Skippers.

Meanwhile, her brother Curt Kahn — who is co-captain of the current Cohasset boys' lacrosse team and President of the Senior Class — has learned that he's been accepted into the Class of 2007 at Trinity College in Hartford, Conn. Curt has been recruited to play lacrosse there, and will be the third Kahn to go from Cohasset High to the college lacrosse ranks. Curt and Jackie's older brother Ely was a goalie at Harvard from 1997 until 2001.

An Appalachian Mountain Marketplace will take place from 7:15 to 8 p.m.. Authentic Appalachian crafts will be for sale, chances can be purchased for an Appalachian Quilt. A slide show of ASP previous trips will also be shown.

Southern Rail, a local favorite Bluegrass/Gospel band, will cap off the evening with a concert at 8 p.m. There will be some foot stompin', hand clappin' entertainment as old and new fans of this local, award winning performance.

Tickets may be purchased at St. Anthony's, St. Stephen's, First Parish, and Second Congregational Churches. Dinner and Concert: adults-$20, children-$8, family maximum - $50. Concert only: adults-$12, children- $6. The Market Place is free and open to all.

Alternatives to invasive plants

On Sunday, March 30, at 2:30 p.m., the Cohasset Garden Club will sponsor a lecture by William E. Brumback at St. Anthony Parish Hall on Summer Street. The lecture will address alternatives to invasive plants that are overtaking and eradicating native plant species indigenous to our area and especially to our wetlands.

As conservation director for the New England Wildflower Society, Brumback has initiated a plant conservation program to protect the region's rare and endangered plants from annihilation and to promote their recovery in the wild. There are currently more than 500 plants that are of conservation concern in New England. Brumback will address major plant conservation and habitat protection challenges before us in the Northeast.

Refreshments will be served. Guests are invited to attend. Admission is free.

BRIDGING THE GENERATION GAP

Sailing talk for Student Coastal Research Center is April 12 at St. Anthony's

The Cohasset Yacht Club will continue its annual support for maritime activities by sponsoring a public lecture on Saturday April 12 at 7 p.m. The speakers for this event will be CYC members Martha and Dana Robes who will present a program on their recently concluded five-year around the world cruise on their cruising yacht Sarah Jane, a Little Harbor 48.

During their voyage, the Robes logged more than 40,000 miles sailing west to east. This lecture will focus on a portion of the trip covering roughly the first two years. During this time, the Robes traveled from Florida to Australia, spanning the South Pacific with stops in such exotic locales as the Friendly Islands (Tonga, Vava'u and Ha'apai), French Polynesia, and New Zealand. (All this provides a sharp contrast to last year's speaker Cam Lewis who spent much of his three month circumnavigation avoiding "growlers" in the Southern Ocean!)

The Robes are currently in the process of building a 65-foot glass Hood design in their yard with launching expected in May.

Proceeds from the talk will go to the Cohasset High School Summer Institute's Center for Student Coastal Research. These funds are being specifically earmarked for construction of two Gloucester Gulls. The Gloucester Gull or Light Dory is a 15.5-foot rowing dory that students will construct in order to carry out water quality studies in Cohasset Harbor, the Gulf River, and Little Harbor.

Additionally, in November this group received a grant from the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency to "enable Cohasset Middle High School students to work as Summer Institute interns re-establishing water quality monitoring in the Gulf River and to assist the Gulf Association in its goal of conducting a Natural Resources Inventory of the Gulf River Watershed."

The location for the lecture will again be St. Anthony's Parish Center and the cost will be $12 per person (students free) if reservations are made by telephone (781) 383-9280, $15 at the door. The lecture is open to the public. Details can be obtained by calling Steve Bobo at (781) 383-9280.

Youngest passengers can get police protection are not properly installed, Treanor says. The numbers are compiled from traffic stops across the state.

The CPD has begun to make a dent that statistic here in town by offering free child car-seat installation by appointment. Treanor, who completed the 32-hour course, went though the steps at the station at 9:30 a.m. on Monday. It was his second appointment that day.

Because seatbelts, seat fabrics and styles vary depending on the age and make of a vehicle, the infant seat may have to be adjusted so it fits with little "wiggle room."

Newcomb's Toyota Camry has leather seats, which are slippery and can allow a car seat to move. Treanor placed some rubber-like material [the same material that can be used to prevent throw rugs from slipping] under the base of the infant seat. He also used plastic "pool noodles" at the point where the seat and seatback meet to make the seat level before installing the base.

Treanor also adjusted the safety harnesses in Sean's infant seat so they were the proper length for his size and explained the seat should be installed in the rear but on the passenger side. That way Newcomb can quickly take a look at her baby while driving. Also the passenger seat is on the curb or sidewalk side making it safer when either putting Sean into the car or taking him out.

Treanor also stressed that parents should not buy a used car seat.

"It's important that you know its history," he said, explaining car seats need to be replaced if the vehicle they are installed in is involved in an accident that results in bodywork. The child restraint may have tiny cracks and therefore, its ability to protect the child could be diminished. Car seats that are older than six years should also be replaced, he said.

All infant seats must meet the safety guidelines issued by the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration (NHTSA).

Treanor described the certification course as "the most intense thing since the police academy." He explained the course also included hands-on installation in different makes and models.

He's installed about a dozen child restraints so far in Cohasset. Each installation can take up to an hour.

"It's preferable to have the child with you," Treanor said, so the seat can be adjusted accordingly.

He suggests the parent or parents bring something along to occupy the child during the installation.

Police Chief Robert Jackson said the financial impact to the police department budget to offer this service is minimal and well worth it.

"If we can't protect the little ones then what are we doing," Jackson said. "That's what it is all about."

To make an appointment to have a child seat installed call the CPD at 781-383-1055.

About child restraints:

When properly installed, child safety seats reduce the risk of death in a motor vehicle crash by 71 percent for infants and 54 percent for toddlers. Safety belts increase the chance of surviving a crash by 45 percent.

Safety tips-before you go:

- Children under 12 should always ride in the back seat. Airbags can seriously injure or kill a child.
- Extremely Important: Never place a rear-facing infant seat in front of an airbag.
- Never place a shoulder belt behind a child's back or under the arm!
- Set a good example: 70 percent of children whose parents do not buckle up will not buckle up when they become adults. Wear your safety belt every time! The Massachusetts Safety Belt Law requires everyone to buckle up.
- Any object in the car can become a projectile in a crash. If you have a trunk, use it to store loose items.
- Learn to position your child's seat by reviewing the directions from the seat manufacturer and your vehicle's owner's manual. If you need assistance, click here to locate your nearest Child Passenger Safety Technician.

Synopsis of annual water quality report

The Cohasset Water Department provided the Mariner with this press release.

On Monday, March 24, the Cohasset Water Commission mailed its 2003 Water Quality Report to all Cohasset residents. EPA requires all water suppliers to prepare and distribute this report by July 1 each year.

"We are pleased to report, again, that Cohasset drinking water is in compliance with all applicable water quality standards," said John McNabb, chairman of the Water Commission.

In 2002, the water department continued to take many significant steps to preserve and protect the quality of Cohasset's public drinking water, including the annual flushing of the distribution system, the rehabilitation of about nine-tenths of a mile of water mains by replacing undersized mains and by cleaning & lining others, and by starting to implement the department's comprehensive "Surface Water Supply Protection Plan," McNabb explained.

EPA regulations require all water suppliers to report all regulated contaminants which are detected in the drinking water. During calendar year 2002, the following contaminants were detected, all within compliance of applicable water quality regulations:

Fluoride – Added to the water to promote strong teeth; detected at a maximum of 1.25 parts per million (ppm), less than the Maximum contaminant Level (MCL) of 4 ppm.

Chlorine – Added to disinfect water to prevent disease from microorganisms. While chlorine is required to be added to the water for public health reasons, it is important to keep chlorine levels as low as possible. "We detected a maximum of 1.45 ppm of chlorine, which is lower than the 4.0 ppm Maximum Residual Disinfection Level recommended by EPA," said McNabb.

Total Trihalomethanes (TTHM) – Byproduct from chlorination and reaction of chlorine with sediment in water mains. TTHM's were detected in the distribution system for an average of 68.7 ppb; which is below the MCL of 100 ppb. "Note that the MCL for TTHM's does not apply for small systems, said McNabb. "We are voluntarily testing for HAC's and TTHM's," said McNabb. "Because we are concerned about these levels and are taking steps to reduce them to provide the maximum possible protection to the people of Cohasset.

"Since HAC's and TTHM's are caused by the reaction of chlorine and sediment in water, we expect that the flushing of the water pipes, our continued distribution system improvements, and planned improvements to the Lily Pond Water Treatment plant will continue to reduce the levels of HAC's and TTHM's," McNabb said.

Total Haloacetic Acids (HAC) – A byproduct from chlorination of water. "While HAC's were detected at 61.9 ppb, and the MCL is 60 ppb, this is not a violation because the MCL does not apply to small systems, under 10,000 populations, like Cohasset. The Water Commission is taking action to reduce HAC levels, by regular flushing of the water distribution system and by changes to the operation of the Lily Pond Water Treatment Plant," McNabb said.

Turbidity – a measure of the amount of sediment in the water. From daily testing, which is an overall measure of water quality, the highest turbidity detected was 0.07 NTU (Nephelometric Turbidity Units), lower than the regulatory limit of 5 NTU.

Sodium. Detected 21.2 ppm. There is no MCL for sodium, but it is recommended that people on salt restricted diets consult with their physicians when the level is over 20 ppm.

Sulfate. Detected 29.9 ppm. There is no MCL for sulfate, which is unregulated but which the water dept. is required to include in our regular annual tests.

Hexachlorobutadiene. Detected at 0.6 ppb. There is no MCL for Hexachlorobutadiene, which is a chemical used to make rubber compounds, used as a solvent, to make lubricants, used as a heat transfer liquid and hydraulic fluid.

"Our aggressive system improvements program will continue after the March 29 Town Meeting, where we expect to get authorization to borrow $2,400,000, which we are able to do without raising water rates, for the next phase of the improvements program," McNabb said.

Copies of the 2003 Water Quality Report are available at Town Hall, the Paul Pratt Memorial Library, and at the Lily Pond Water Treatment Plant.

Who will be the first-ever Mr. Skipper?

ball and lacrosse teams, said helping raise money to offset the cost of prom tickets was a cause worth supporting.

"This is the first time it's being done and I thought I'd give it a whirl," he said.

English teacher Christine Berman, who came to Cohasset last fall from Scituate High, suggested the pageant (which is run in Scituate) would be a good fundraiser and the idea snowballed from there, O'Brien said.

School Health Director Mike Gill said the event is student-run and doesn't involve too much work.

"It's a chance for the senior class to make some money," he said. "So we thought we'd give it a shot."

Mr. Skipper Night has been talked up at lunch to generate more interest. Also, flyers and posters have gone up, in addition to a notice in the school newspaper.

The pageant begins at 7 p.m., Friday at the high school gymnasium. Tickets, which are $6 each, are available at the door.

O'Brien said while most of the contestants are seniors, there is one freshman competing and a couple of sophomores and juniors.

Having boys from the different grades compete ensures there classmates will support the event, Gill said.

O'Brien said the talent competition could run the gamut from playing the piano or singing, to showing off wrestling moves.

Moms will run the concession stand, O'Brien said. She said the tuxedos are being donated by Mr. Tux in Hanover and Gingiss Formalwear in Braintree.

Judges will be Assistant Principal Jack DeLorenzo, art teacher Nina Berkowitz; English teacher Carolyn Crimmons; Nicole Santoro, a CHS graduate and special education aide; and Berman.

O'Brien said all contestants will compete on all four categories.

"No one will be eliminated," she said.

Tony Rolfe, the football coach, will provide the commentary including providing a short biography of the contestants including height and weight. A raffle with two $50 gift certificates to Siros in Hull is also planned. The boy chosen as Mr. Skipper will receive $50 in cash.

O'Brien said because the class is so small, money is needed to offset the cost of the prom and keep the price of the tickets down. This spring the class will take trolleys all the way to the Venezia Restaurant in Boston for the prom.

"It's hard with so few kids in the class," she explained about the cost. She pointed out in bigger high schools, like Weymouth, the students can pay much less to their prom because the cost can be divided among so many more.

Senior Arianna Dedes, another event organizer, said she hopes the event will be a success.

"We definitely need money for the senior class and we're working really hard," she said. "We'd also be happy if the event became a tradition."

Dedes said the Class of 2003 has left a good impression on the school and Mr. Skipper Night would be something positive the class could leave behind.

Jazzing it up for 50th gala!

The Social Service League of Cohasset will jazz it up for the 50th anniversary of its treasured Consignment Shop with a dinner, auction and live entertainment at the Cohasset Golf Club on Saturday, April 5 from 6:30-11p.m.

Noted jazz vocalist Ann Czerkowski and her father, saxophonist John Linscott, will tribute the League's Consignment Shop and volunteers by performing original jazz pieces from their acclaimed CD, "Manhattan Lady."

Television news anchor Anthony Everett will keep up the beat with a live auction featuring a wide-array of newsworthy items including: a week-long stay at a Four Seasons Resort in Scottsdale, Ariz., nights at the Ritz Carlton, a week's retreat at a New Hampshire hideaway, tickets to sporting events, autographed sports memorabilia, commissioned portraits and other works of art, sailing adventures and more.

More than 45 silent auction items also will be on display, including gift certificates to restaurants, theater tickets, an assortment of items from local merchants, hand-made jewelry and clothing, and other exciting items. Clubhouse executive chef Tina Ricci is planning a gourmet dinner menu.

Tickets are $125. Proceeds from both the event and the League's Consignment Shop benefit the charity's counseling services, oncology support groups, Meals on Wheels, a scholarship fund, confidential mental health services and other programs. A yea for police-fire station expansion

The nature of their job means they never intended to win any popularity contests. Although we want firefighters and paramedics to be there when we need them — no one wants to have the need, so to speak. House fires are a nightmare as is a heart attack or automobile accident. While we're grateful to see the ambulance respond, we're not thrilled to face the reality of the incident that precipitated it. And while firefighters are praised for saving lives, they use axes to break through roofs and tear down walls, and pour tons of water into burning buildings.

Police officers also don't get high marks from the perpetrator who's been issued a ticket following a traffic stop or from a suspect who's been arrested on an OUI, drug offense or other crime.

Yet in Cohasset, our public safety officers in both departments have quietly gone about performing their duties with little expectation of even a pat of the back.

Here at the Mariner, we cover police and fire when accidents, fires, crimes and tragedies occur. We find the men and women in both departments to be dedicated, hard-working professionals.

The time has come to show our appreciation and our understanding of the importance of the job they perform by making the facility they work in adequate to meet their needs.

That's right, adequate. What voters are being asked at Saturday's Town Meeting is not for a state-of-the-art facility, but to appropriate enough money to expand the current police-fire station that was built 41 years ago so it can accommodate both departments for about five more years.

It's a stopgap measure until the fiscal picture improves enough to build a new police station sometime down the road. The fire department would then be able to spread out into the police side of the building on Elm Street.

Last fall, voters at November's Special Town Meeting appropriated $50,000 to cover detailed architectural designs to expand the existing building.

The estimated $800,000 cost for the expansion can be paid for through retiring debt service and not affect the tax rate.

Both Police Chief Robert Jackson and Fire Chief Roger Lincoln wholeheartedly support the project. It's not going to answer all the problems that exist in the tight quarters they work in now, but it will make the facility habitable.

The expansion will provide a bunk room and facilities for female paramedics and office space for fire captains. It also includes an eight-foot addition to the rear of the building so that the new ladder truck, when purchased, will fit inside. The roof will be raised 2-1/2 feet so that maintenance can be performed on the fire trucks while indoors. A new squad room for police and additional office space with new computer technology are also planned.

Over the years, Cohasset has demonstrated its commitment to the schools and Department of Public Works with new and/or expanded and renovated facilities. The library also has a new home and Town Hall was expanded sometime ago.

It's time to ante up for our police and fire departments. The project will be explained in detail on Saturday.

Please attend and vote yes and support our police officers and firefighters.

Town Counsel explains concerns over bylaw change

TO THE EDITOR:

The Cohasset Mariner reports in an article titled "Door Closes on house permit bylaw changes" that a planning board member "told Selectmen last Thursday he did not fully understand Town's Counsel's concerns" (3/13/03, p. 3) regarding a proposed article for the annual town meeting for a building permit by law.

This letter is to explain my concerns. Prior to expressing these concerns, I had recommended, and do continue to recommend, that the town of Cohasset, like other town's are now doing, adopt a coordinating bylaw that grants additional powers to the Building Inspector to deny building permits if he does not receive from the various regulatory boards appropriate certifications that the matters under the jurisdiction of that particular board or commission have been completed. That is what I understood was happening with the proposed building permit article.

To my surprise during a conference call, I learned for the first time the intent of the proposed bylaw was not to empower the building inspector, but to substantially weaken the building inspector by essentially giving the Planning Board a veto over all building permits thereby essentially transferring the building inspectors zoning function to the Planning Board. Upon hearing this plan for the article, I acknowledge I immediately raised a host of practical and legal concerns, and I recommended that we stick to a coordinating, empowering article. That empowering article was not what the Planning Board wanted, so it withdrew the article.

I continue to recommend that the town adopt a coordinating bylaw, as such a bylaw benefits the building inspector, gives the other regulatory boards an opportunity to preserve their jurisdiction, and gives the property owner the advantage of orderly process.

Ban smoking in Cohasset

TO THE EDITOR:

As a health educator, I believe it is important to support the Town Meeting warrant article that would ban smoking in Cohasset bars and restaurants because:

- One in every 18 people suffers from asthma and one in every five has an allergy. This is a large and increasing portion of the population.
- Tobacco smoke is a major preventable trigger of asthma and allergy symptoms.
- Second-hand smoke can bring on life-threatening asthma symptoms. It increases the frequency of asthma episodes and the severity of symptoms such as shortness of breath, wheezing, chest tightness and bronchial constriction.

Everyone should be free to work at or patronize all restaurants and other establishments without worrying about whether they will suddenly find it difficult to breathe. Even waiting for a table or walking through a smoky area can cause serious distress for a person with sensitive airways. Their breathing may be compromised for days afterwards, and they become more vulnerable to harm from other asthma triggers. Employees who spend long hours at their bar and food service work-sites especially need to be protected.

Completely smoke-free premises are the only real solution. So-called "non-smoking areas" should really be called "second-hand smoking areas," since trying to keep the air separate is like trying to chlorinate only half of a swimming pool. It simply doesn't work.

Mariners Park pilings clarified

TO THE EDITOR:

It was with mild amusement that I read the article in the March 20th edition of the Cohasset Mariner regarding the docks at Mariners Park.

I would like to offer a brief history of the dock and piling system that has failed so miserably. The ice is being blamed for the piles being pulled from the mud; this is at best partially true.

In the original design, the ramp to the float was to be 50 feet long. There were no pilings in the original plan. The float was to be held by bottom anchors, as is the case at the yacht club. Just after Army Corps permits were issued, the plan was revised to use pilings. The Corps agreed with the change and the project was started.

Prior to the delivery of the ramp, the harbormaster pointed out that a 50-foot ramp would be impossible to move. The engineer and Mr. Haddad at that point decided to switch to a 30-foot ramp to "solve" the problem. This moved the float inland 20 feet. The Hagerty Committee (HC) was not informed of the move. A new ramp was ordered and pilings were driven in the bottom. Unfortunately the move inland placed the pilings where the mud was not deep enough to hold them. The pilings were wobbly from day one. The HC sent a memo to the Selectmen addressing this problem. The memo also addressed the fact that the float rested on the bottom at low tide, making it inaccessible. This and subsequent memos were sent to the Town, and were ignored.

Back in December the HC was called before the Selectmen to see if the committee should be disbanded. At that time the HC gave the Selectmen a list of things that have to be addressed at Mariners Park, including re-configuring the float. We suggested at that time that the float be moved out and attached to the ramp in the manner that is now being considered.

At that meeting Selectman Sullivan complained that this was the first time these issues were brought to their attention, Mr. Callahan suggested the problem was a design flaw, and Mr. Haddad said the location of the docks was "a matter of opinion".

While the harbor did ice up this year, it was not that icy. The pilings should never been placed where they were. I have heard estimates that the piles were driven less than 5 feet. Cohasset Harbor Marina did not lose a single pile, and I would doubt that properly driven piles would have been pulled out.

Funds that were voted by Town Meeting for the project at Mariners Park have been diverted to other projects. Over $30,000 has been put into the building, which was not part of the project. The town is proposing to build a bathroom in the flood plain at the back of the building. This area is subject to storm surges. The pump for the sewer is located at the edge of the building and is mounted high enough to keep it from getting flooded. Why is town money being spent to locate a bathroom where it might flood?

There are many items that need to be addressed at the park, and they ought to be completed as Town Meeting was lead to believe they would be. Money that was allocated for the project should not be doled out to pet projects until Mariners Park is completed.

I am also somewhat disappointed by recent articles in the Mariner regarding this project. No effort was made by either reporter to contact the HC to get both sides of this issue. This project has been a long time in the making. Let's work together and get it done.

Some more on nuclear nonsense

TO THE EDITOR:

The citizens' warrant article asking us to petition the authorities to change the method of storing spent fuel at the Pilgrim nuclear-electric plant states that scientists from leading universities support the proposed dry cask storage. Well, I don't know of any nuclear engineering professor that thinks shifting spent fuel from water storage to dry storage casks justifies the needless risks of additional fuel handling, unless there is no more room in the storage pool.

Dry storage casks are a useful supplement to storage pools when the pool's capacity has been reached, but they should not be considered a preferable alternative to well protected storage pools. .A significant disadvantage is that the fuel would have to be handled again later, to place it in shipping casks, instead of handling only once and under water. The opinions of scientists in other disciplines aren't very relevant. to this issue, although handy for activists to cite when it suits their purpose. And the notions of the Union of Concerned "Scientists" don't carry any weight in scientific circles, although much quoted by journalists too lazy or too naïve to go to real authorities.

Note that anti-nuke activists have vigorously opposed dry cask storage in cases where the utility proposed adding dry storage because it was running out of storage pool space! And who do you suppose is helping subvert implementation of the permanent nuclear waste facility at Yucca Mountain?

I've long been fascinated by the passionate certainty of the anti-nukes relative to their glaring lack of knowledge of the subject they are so passionate about.. For example, an unqualified statement in the warrant to the effect that breaching the spent fuel storage pool would cause the nuclear fuel to burn and contaminate 25,000 square miles!

Probably this foolish article will pass, being the last article on the warrant and attended mainly by those dedicated to its passage while most others will have shrugged and gone home for cocoa or other relaxant. I note that Duxbury had the good sense to vote down the same idea and instead voted for an amendment, urging the government to move forward expeditiously on the permanent nuclear waste repository at Yucca Mountain.

QUESTION OF THE WEEK

Should Cohasset resign itself to the eventuality of a new Logan runway and more flights overhead?

Selectman/Roger Hill

I am in favor of the continued fight against Massport. In 1980, South Boston, Dorchester and Quincy lobbied Massport to agree to what amounts to a "no fly zone" which pushed the planes routes further south over Cohasset!

Approximately 6,000 gallons of jet fuel is burned over us each day, the pollution rate is higher in the air we breathe, water we drink, and ground our children play on as a result.

On the federal level we are not receiving any representation on this issue. Unfortunately, the only way to deal with Massport effectively is through the court system. That takes time and money, but that burden does not just fall on Cohasset. Hull, Hingham and Cohasset will all be apart of the suit. The only way for us to make progress on this issue is to stick together and continue fighting. If not, our silence will count as acceptable.

On the average, planes fly over us at a rate of two per minute. An airplane emits nine times the pollution as a bus. If you can imagine, this equates to 18 buses a minute coming through Cohasset, the pollution level is staggering, not to mention the noise level. The construction of the new runway will only increase flights over Cohasset dramatically.

As Selectman, I will make sure that the voices and concerns of our citizens and town will be heard and addressed on this and other issues. I am strongly committed to protecting and preserving the town's character.

SELECTMAN/Gabriel Gomez

Cohasset must not give up the fight against the proposed runway. Additional jet traffic over Cohasset poses very real problems of noise and pollution with the potential to result in both health problems and falling property values. With all indications showing Logan currently under capacity, now is a better time than ever to fight the project.

Beyond dealing with the day-to-day details of running Cohasset, the Board of Selectmen must represent and advocate for the citizens of Cohasset to state officials on long-term issues such as the runway. Concerned citizens groups, such as the South Shore Jet Pollution Council, have been working tirelessly to protect Cohasset. And still, it is the Board of Selectmen that must speak with one voice for the citizens of Cohasset to hold State Representative Bradley and State Senator Hedlund accountable and to push Senator Kennedy, Senator Kerry and Representative Delahunt to take a stand. Further, it is the Board of Selectmen that can advocate for Cohasset to Governor Romney.

Like the issues of 40B and local aid cuts, the runway is a decision being made at the state level that threatens a negative impact on Cohasset. In the face of these hurdles, the Board of Selectmen must not only work within the town to mitigate the impact, but also intermediate between Cohasset voters and state officials to ensure that our needs are met.

The Selectman that you elect April 5th should not only be a leader with experience in building consensus within groups like the Board, but, to best represent your interests to state officials, he must also be an individual with experience initiating contact and negotiating with powerful individuals. I believe that my business and military background has prepared me well and I would be proud to serve Cohasset in this capacity.

SELECTMAN/Michael Sullivan

Cohasset has good reason not to concede the inevitability of a new Logan runway.

In 2002, the Mitre Corporation issued an analysis based on FAA guidelines and Massport delay statistics which concluded that there was "little benefit attributable to the new runway" and that the delay data was exaggerated tenfold. Results of this analysis did not, however, appear in Massport's Final Environmental Impact Report. Since the environmental and economic analyses in that report rests on the delay assumptions, they must be reexamined in light of Mitre's conclusions. As such, the Board of Selectmen requested that the Attorney General issue a Notice of Project Change as the discovery of this information constitutes a material change in a project.

Similarly, last year, at the request of Ralph Dormitzer and other interested individuals, Massport's Noise Abatement Office (NOA) conducted a noise survey in Cohasset. The results indicate that Cohasset experiences aviation noise from a number of configurations at Logan. As a result of this survey, there has been continuous dialogue with Massport and the FAA over the mitigation efforts to be made.

Regardless of runway expansion, Cohasset experiences significant air traffic. The Board of Selectmen, has been working with Senator Hedlund and Representative Bradley, along with Congressman Delahunt's office, to redirect flight patterns out over the ocean. Real progress can be made on this front, though it will be slow going.

FAA Director Jane Garvey's staff met with me last year to discuss flight patterns, and they clearly understand our concerns. Still, they warned that this type of change is a three-year administrative process.

Although it will be time-consuming and challenging to fight the runway and change flight patterns, it is in the best interest of Cohasset to keep up the fight.

Candidate profiles

This is the final week for Question of the Week. Next week profiles of the candidates will be featured.

Debate tonight

Candidates for a seat on the Board of Selectmen will square off tonight in a debate at 8 p.m. at Town Hall. Incumbent Michael Sullivan and challengers Roger Hill and Gabriel Gomez will participate in the debate, which will be moderated by Noel Collins and broadcast on the town's local cable channel. Questions will come from both the press and residents. Viewers can call the Selectmen's office at 781-383-4105.

HEALTH NOTES

Some facts about new respiratory illness

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

Recently, the media has been filled with stories about a strange pneumonia-like illness. The new malady has been named Sudden Acute Respiratory Syndrome (SARS). Actually, according to the Center for Disease Control(CDC), SARS is a respiratory illness of unknown cause that has recently been reported in a number of countries. As of March 21, The World Health Organization reported 337 cases of SARS from 14 countries. That is including 10 people who have died from the illness internationally, and in the United States there have been 22 reports of SARS that are under investigation in a total of 12 states. We have not yet had deaths in the United States. The CDC has identified situations where a case in a traveler may have involved transmission to others in the United States.

In one cluster, an individual who traveled to Asia may have been the source of infection in two health care workers who provided care, and in the second situation, one person who traveled to Asia may have been the source of infection in a family member. In addition, two Americans stayed in the hotel in Kowloon, Hong Kong, that's been implicated as the initial source of most of the spread of this disease. The two Americans were staying on the ninth floor of the hotel, which is the place where almost all of the international cases appeared to have been exposed initially during sometime in February. Those two Americans are now in the United States and are included in the 22 cases cited above.

As to prevention, the CDC knows that apparently, spread of this illness can be prevented by use of appropriate precautions in health-care environments.

If you are ill with fever accompanied by cough or difficulty breathing, you should consult a health care provider.

For the general population, however, the CDC recommends careful screening for symptoms. If you are ill with fever accompanied by cough or difficulty breathing, you should consult a health care provider. To help your health-care provider make a diagnosis, tell them about any recent travel to regions where cases of SARS have been reported and whether you were in contact with someone who had these symptoms.

Moreover, the CDC has issued about 35,000 health alerts to arriving travelers and have intercepted more than five planes and boats that have passengers ill that have recently traveled to the affected areas. These efforts are resulting in identification of additional suspect patients and have led to a much greater awareness among travelers of the need to seek medical attention if a fever and respiratory are developed after departure, within seven days of departure from one of the suspect countries. If you are traveling, or have just come back from a trip, and you become ill with fever, accompanied by cough or difficulty in breathing, you should consult a health care provider and tell them about your recent travel.

Just in case you may be thinking that this illness is related to the war on terrorism, we have reassurance from the CDC: "Information currently available about SARS indicates that people who appear to be most at risk are either health-care workers taking care of sick people or family members or household contacts of those who are infected with SARS. That pattern of transmission is what would typically be expected in a contagious respiratory or flu-like illness."

For more information about SARS, contact the Board of Health or the Center for Disease control in Atlanta.

Vineyard bird count

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

I was reading the Vineyard Gazette the other day to see if Bill Clinton had returned to check out the interns when I spotted a story that aroused my curiosity.

The first ever tufted duck had been spotted on Martha's Vineyard by a quartet of "birders" at 8:15 in the morning on Crackatuxet Cove along the south shore of Edgartown.

Just as I suspected, the year 'round denizens of the vacation island have little to do in the wintertime, except maybe go down to the high school gym and boo the Nantucket basketball team.

Since the range of the tufted duck includes the Middle East, I would tend to think of the mid-winter visitor to the Vineyard as just another refugee from Saddam Hussein, but not to the birders.

"It was feeding by diving repeatedly and came into close contact with red-breasted mergansers and common goldeyes as well," enthused E. Vernon Laux, who has a weekly bird column in the Gazette.

"The views were fabulous. The year is off to a great start with a new and pleasing bird finally added to the all-time list of avifauna seen on Martha's Vineyard."

Of course, the big question to the rest of us is just what were Laux, Sally Anderson of West Tisbury, Peter Trimble of Mashpee and Bill Loughran of Cotuit doing on Crackatuxet Cove at 8:15 of a cold January morning?

Why, they were taking part in the 42nd annual Martha's Vineyard Christmas Bird Count (CBC), the day nosy bird-lovers on the island — and a few off-islanders, too — fan out to count every bird they can find.

I spent the summer working on Martha's Vineyard in 1949, which is 54 years ago, so I can't be blamed for any annoyance the island's birds have to put up with after that.

A little deeper research and I discovered that there appear to be Christmas Bird Counts all over Massachusetts, including the Buzzard's Bay, the Cape Cod and the Stellwagon Bank, which is conducted by boat.

It was nearly two months before I got the final score of the great Martha's Vineyard Christmas Bird Count, published in two columns (where else?) in the Vineyard Gazette.

Vineyard birders fixed their binoculars on 116 species, bringing to 206 the all-time list since 1960, and 134,963 individuals, including — yes, there he is — one tufted duck.

There were also 1,836 black ducks, which I recall as the name of a rumrunner's boat during Prohibition that used to sneak booze into Fall River in the wake of the New York night boat.

But I digress . . .

Martha's Vineyard being an island in the ocean, one might think the gull would be the bird of choice. But, no. There were only 1,250 herring gulls, 223 black-backed gulls, 146 ring-billed gulls and one Bonaparte's gull.

Incidentally, there is no such thing as a sea gull. So don't be disappointed if you don't see one in next Martha's Vineyard Christmas Bird Count, already scheduled for Dec. 28, 2003 — if the Nantucket basketball team in not in town, that is.

White-throated sparrows — the 'Peabody Birds'

A BIRDERS EYE VIEW

JOANNE C. NORTON

There are about 320 species of New World Sparrows found worldwide. They are all small songbirds, with conical bills. Almost all are brown in color and streaky in pattern. They all feed on the ground and in low bushes. Even though less than 50 of these species are found in North America, all this similarity makes them hard to tell apart. Identification frequently has to be left as merely "LBJ", or "Little Brown Job".

One of them, the White-throated Sparrow, has two distinctive features that help it stand out from the rest. It has a white throat outlined thinly in black, and its lores, or areas between the eye and the bill, are yellow. It also has a very clear song that helps with the identification. Its whistled notes sound something like "Old-Sam-Peabody-Peabody-Peabody" to most people. Canadians prefer to think of it as "Oh-sweet-Canada-Canada-Canada." There is yet another mnemonic that goes like this: "Sow-wheat-Peverly-Peverly-Peverly". The story is that Farmer Peverly couldn't decide what to plant. After listening to White-throated Sparrows singing all around his fields, he planted wheat with great success.

White-throated Sparrows are separated into two color morphs, the white-striped birds and the tan-striped birds. These are not sub-species, but the heads of some birds have white stripes and others have tan stripes. For years, scientists were sure that the different coloration represented males and females. Then there was the theory that tan-striped birds were juveniles and the white-striped birds were adults. It turns out that neither of these ideas is correct. Some birds simply have tan head stripes and some have white head stripes, the way some people have red hair and some people have brown hair. Polymorphism that is unrelated to sex or age is very rare.

White-throated Sparrows are separated into two color morphs, the white-striped birds and the tan-striped birds. These are not sub-species, but the heads of some birds have white stripes and others have tan stripes.

The color of their stripes does seem to affect their behavior, though. White-striped birds, whether male or female, are more aggressive than their tan-striped counterparts. The tan-striped birds, on the other hand, are more attentive to their young and the responsibilities of parenthood. One theory is that the more aggressive white-striped birds get better territories. The tan-striped birds have to make up for poorer nest sites by working harder to feed and care for their babies. In addition, the attraction between opposite morphs is very strong in White-throated Sparrows. There are almost no pairings of like-striped birds with each other. White-striped females sing and tan-striped females do not. Singing, aggressive, white-striped males usually succeed in chasing away singing, aggressive, white-striped females. At the same time, all the wing movement and singing activity by the white-striped females seems to attract the tan-striped males.

In the winter, White-throated Sparrows form flocks. The purpose of this strategy is to make it easier to find food and to provide safety from predators. More birds flocked together means more eyes looking, which means more success in locating food sources and in spotting potential danger. White-throated Sparrows eat seeds in the winter, but eat and feed insects to their young during the breeding season. They use a "double-scratch" technique for foraging. This involves hopping up to let both feet reach forward together, then quickly backward, before resuming the regular upright position. This repeated process rapidly scatters leaf litter and debris to uncover food.

What about threats to population numbers? The danger faced in the 19th century from being hunted for food is no longer real, but there are other dangers. Mammals raid nests that are too close to the ground. Strangely, cowbirds do not parasitize White-throated Sparrow nests very often, in spite of the fact these sparrows tend to stay more at the edge of forests than deep within forests. Collision with towers is a common hazard for these nocturnal migrants. According to William E. Davis, Jr., more than 400 have been reported killed at the Prudential tower in Boston in a single night.

The White-crowned Sparrow is similar to the White-throated Sparrow, in that some birds have white head stripes and some tan. In this case, however, it is the adults who have bright white stripes and the juveniles who have tan head stripes. Other differences are that they never have a white throat, and their breast is a pearly gray color. Their bills are yellow or pink in contrast to the gray bill of the White-throated Sparrow. Seen less often in the east than White-throated Sparrows, they do show up with some regularity both on World's End and Turkey Hill.

White-throated sparrow © Dan Sudia

Although White-throated Sparrows regularly breed in western Massachusetts, only a few nest in the eastern part of the state. They are a common migrant throughout the state in April and May and again in October. The number is variable from year to year, but quite a few survive winter in Massachusetts, as is demonstrated by the Christmas Bird Count. In Hingham alone, we usually get 5 to 30 on the CBC. Counts in other parts of Massachusetts may get up to 100. If you are not lucky enough to have them at your feeders, a good place to look for them is at World's End and at Turkey Hill.

Romney, legislature not winning war on budget

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

A recap and analysis about the week in state government.

"United We Stand" is the most effective organizing principle imaginable for a war, or approaching any challenge faced by a diverse group. As a true war began in Iraq, the leaders of Massachusetts exhibited solidarity behind helping the nation's cause. The stock they placed in unity made one wonder what would happen if they applied the same approach to the state they run.

To state the obvious — but it needs to be stated — balancing the budget is not as important as winning the war. That said, balancing the budget is still important, and the job of Mitt Romney, Tom Finneran and Bob Travaglini is not winning the war. It's balancing the budget and getting the state back on track.

And it's clear their approach to the two challenges differs. They spoke as one about the need to protect the public. Aside from that, though, it was pretty easy to determine the conversation about how to run the state is proceeding along the old, red-team vs. blue team line, not according to the red, white and blue model that makes everybody look good.

Talk now is increasing that the House is going to do what it always does – throw most of the governor's budget away and start over. Given the demands posed by the present emergency, and the volume of innovations proposed (sketchily) by the rookie governor, there's some head scratching among moderates that the Romney budget was trashed so quickly.

A consensus has developed that the House had better come up with something good, something that both justifies and transcends the Democrats' criticism of the governor. A hypothetical compromise is shockingly simple to define: Romney would agree to a $1 billion tax hike; the Democrats would agree to $1 billion worth of the restructuring proposed in the Romney budget, and the governor would give up the other $1 billion worth; and both sides would agree on $1 billion in spending cuts. Why this won't happen is not dissimilar to why the United Nations Security Council couldn't get together on an approach to Saddam. The dispute really comes down to a disagreement of perspective or values, and nobody wants to abandon the values. As the Globe's Rick Klein put it, Romney sees the government as broken. Finneran doesn't. And Romney sees tax hikes as the opposite of good management.

One can only make comparisons between global geopolitics and state-government affairs with a disclaimer, and this is it: drawing analogies between governing the world and governing the state is only that. It's not to equate the importance of the two. With that understood, there's no harm in looking for instruction from the global stage.

But of course, as soon as we do that we notice half the world opposes how the U.S. is proceeding in Iraq, and the other half is all for it. So perhaps on both levels, all we can do is hang on and hope for the best. Maybe everything will turn out great.

Concerns about security and the larger global picture kept people somewhat distracted, even as the legislative machinery cranked up.

• Romney details massachusetts war footing — The governor said that along with other states, Massachusetts would ramp security up to levels not seen since right after Sept. 11. Other than Logan Airport and the Fleet Center, though, the governor said the presence of extra guards and watchful eyes would be low key. Romney did go up in a State Police helicopter to observe a gas tanker entering Boston harbor – a normally routine event that in these days worries public safety leaders. Officials put the Framingham emergency command center on line as the war got under way.

• Ignoring court order, House seats Patrick — By a vote of 116-21, the House seated Rep. Matthew Patrick, D-Falmouth. The Superior Court had ordered a special election be held for Patrick's seat, but House leaders ignored that ruling, arguing only they have jurisdiction over whether and when an election is held.

• House and Senate send governor snow and ice budget — The Legislature approved a $62 million supplemental budget for snow and ice removal and sent it to the governor; it will cover the budgetary problems caused by the under-funding of the snow and ice removal account, an annual phenomenon made even worse this year by the bad weather.

• Administration will review capital spending — The state plans to spend $3 billion servicing debt obligations this year, and Administration and Finance Secretary Eric Kriss said there's little rhyme or reason as to how the debt is added, authorized or tracked. The administration plans a top to bottom review of capital operations, Kriss said, with a plan for rationalizing the system ready by July.

• Kriss warns of municipal failure if local aid too deeply cut — The secretary also said some cities and towns could lose fiscal viability if the Legislature cuts to the upper limit of what House Ways and Means Committee Chairman John Rogers, D-Norwood, has warned about.

• Housing probably won't get capital funds; transport could — The administration called on the Legislature to capitalize the Affordable Housing Trust Fund, which was authorized in a major housing bill last year. Officials also said they may well put together a "mini transportation bond bill," which would authorize borrowing for local and state highway projects that need to go out to bid quickly. A multibillion dollar transportation bond is passed every few years, but with the fiscal crisis and the desire to review capital spending in toto, such a bill is not likely to be proposed soon.

• IG to look at land deals around MDC — Inspector General Gregory Sullivan said he's going to investigate two land deals the Herald's been reporting on vigorously. In one, the MDC may have unnecessarily purchased land around the Quabbin Reservoir from a politically connected developer. In another, Sullivan may question the legitimacy of the sale of six acres to Joe Trainor, a former aide to Gov. Weld and Speaker Finneran; Trainor's now a judge.

QUESTIONS

BHRC is sponsored and underwritten by Fleet Bank as a public service for readers of the Mariner. It is written by Bob Katzen who has covered the legislature for over 25 years and has been providing this feature to newspapers since 1975.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local representatives votes on three roll calls from the week of March 17-21. There were no roll calls in the Senate last week.

All three House roll calls are on the constitutional controversy surrounding the disputed November 2002 election for state representative in the Cape's Third Barnstable District. The question is whether the legislature or the courts have the power to determine the winner and/or to call for a special election for the seat.

Initial election results gave incumbent Democrat Matthew Patrick (D-Falmouth) a 12-vote victory. He received 8,640 votes to the Republican challenger Larry Wheatley's 8,628. A recount increased Patrick's margin over his challenger to 17 votes and the recount returns were certified by the governor and the Governor's Council on December 4. On December 30, in response to a complaint filed by Wheatley, the Barnstable Superior Court ruled that irregularities place the results of the election in doubt and ordered that a new election be held. Two days later, the House seated Patrick under a "holdover" provision of the Massachusetts constitution to ensure that the Third Barnstable District has temporary representation. On January 13, a special House committee held a public hearing on the controversy. Last week, the House approved resolutions drafted by the committee declaring Patrick the representative from the Third Barnstable District.

DECLARE PATRICK ELECTED (H 3720)

House 116-21, approved resolutions stating that Matthew Patrick was duly elected and is the representative of the Third Barnstable District. Supporters said the Massachusetts constitution clearly gives the House this authority when it states "the House of Representatives shall be the judge of returns, elections and qualifications of its own members." They argued that a special House committee spent hours investigating the matter and concluded that Patrick should be seated. Some noted that the fact that 13 voters from the Third Barnstable District were mistakenly given ballots that listed candidates from another district would still not negate the 17-vote margin of victory. They also said that Wheately has not produced a single witness who says he was deprived from voting because of an allegation that one precinct was closed for a short period because it ran out of ballots. Opponents said a Superior Court has called for a new election but that order has been ignored. They noted that in addition to the 13 ballots that did not include Patrick or Wheatley's names, there were also eight absentee ballots with the same omission and testimony from a police officer that some 45 people left the waiting line when a precinct ran out of ballots. They argued that this totals 66 people who were denied the right to vote-- almost four times the margin of the recount results. (A "Yea" vote is for seating Patrick. A "Nay" vote is against seating Patrick).

Y

OBTAIN SJC RULING (H 3720)

House 116-21, rejected an amendment asking the Supreme Judicial Court (SJC) if the House has the power and authority to refuse to follow an order of the Superior Court for a new election in the Third Barnstable District. Amendment supporters said this will simple ask the state's highest court for an opinion on this controversial issue and noted that the case would be closed if the court says the House has the authority. They noted the separation of powers in the constitution is important and argued that the creation of the SJC ensures there is a neutral decision-maker. Amendment opponents said asking the court's opinion would abrogate the rights and responsibilities of the legislature. They argued that the constitution and case law is clear that the House has authority in this matter. (A "Yea" vote is for asking for an SJC opinion. A "Nay" vote is against asking for an SJC opinion).

N

CALL FOR NEW ELECTION (H 3720)

House 116-21, rejected an amendment calling for a special election for representative in the Third Barnstable District. Amendment supporters said the House should do the right thing and call for a special election in order to remove the cloud over this situation. They argued that there is clearly a vacancy in the seat since Patrick has never taken the oath of office and was only temporarily given to right to vote and debate under a provision of the constitution designed to ensure a district has representation if there is an election dispute. Amendment opponents said the House does not have the authority to call a special election because Patrick won the election and technically there is no vacancy. Some noted that the turnout for a special election would be far less than the 17,000 plus people who voted in the regular November election and would allow a small minority to elect a representative. (A "Yea" vote is for a special election. A "Nay" vote is against a special election).

Saturday's Town Meeting is packed with issues

One of the first items to be discussed will be the budget for fiscal year 2004. The proposed general override will need two-thirds approval to go to a vote in the April 5 election. Selectmen and members of School Committee hope that by lowering the override from $485,000, they have convinced residents that as much as possible was cut from the operating budget without sacrificing the quality of services in town.

A new school bus, at a cost of $60,000, is at the top of the school department's wish list. The schools operate five full-size buses each day, but their sixth bus was permanently sidelined by an accident. The lack of a spare bus has caused problems when buses need to be serviced or repaired.

Superintendent Edward Malvey said that renting a bus is expensive and not always possible, and running on three or four buses can result in a chaotic school day. Having a sixth bus, Malvey said, would allow repairs to be done during weekdays, instead of forcing schools to hire mechanics on weekends at higher costs. Both the Selectmen and the Advisory Board voted unanimously to recommend the article.

The schools aren't the only ones with needs. Police and Fire officials hope residents at Town Meeting will grant their request and vote to fund improvements to the police and fire station. A base bid, at a cost of $675,000, would pay for the expansion of women's facilities and office space in the station. It would also cover extending the garage by eight feet in the rear of the building so that when the fire department's 25-year-old ladder truck is retired, its new replacement will fit.

An additional $125,000 would pay to raise the building's roof two and a half feet so maintenance can be done on fire trucks while inside. Currently, the fire department must take vehicles outside three times a week to perform routine maintenance.

Selectmen and the Advisory Board voted unanimously Tuesday to support both phases of the police and fire station expansion. The improvements will allow the building to serve as the permanent home of the fire department for the next 20 to 25 years. Police still hope the town will appropriate money for a new police station sometime in the near future.

The general override will need two-thirds approval to go to a vote in the April 5 election.

Police and Fire officials aren't the only one's looking to improve their home. The Historical Society hopes to receive $300,000 from the Community Preservation Fund for improvements to their new home at the old Paul Pratt Memorial Library. The Community Preservation Committee has recommended the appropriation, most of which would pay for the construction of two senior apartments that would help pay the Historical Society's operating cost in the building.

Selectmen have requested that the apartments be made affordable by state standards, but the Historical Society has said it would not be able to survive financially if that were the case. Selectmen still plan to lobby for affordable apartments: they will meet Saturday morning before Town Meeting with the Historical Society, the CPC and the Advisory Board. Town Manager Mark Haddad has advised the Selectmen and the Advisory Board to delay making recommendations on the article until after the sale of the old library is closed on Friday.

The CPC has also recommended that $36,000 go toward a project to renovate a building on the Hagerty Property and $25,000 go toward a feasibility study of a bike and pedestrian trail along the town's stretch of the Greenbush railroad. Selectmen unanimously recommended both those appropriations. The Advisory Board voted by majority to support the former and unanimously to support the latter.

Amnesty bylaw

As far as new bylaws are concerned, with debate on the ledge bylaw postponed indefinitely (see related story), an article that would give amnesty to illegal apartments will take center stage. Under the bylaw, apartments would be granted a comprehensive permit, provided they were brought up to code and made "affordable" by state standards.

Selectman Tom Callahan submitted a revised version of the bylaw to Selectmen Tuesday night, who voted unanimously to recommend the article. Callahan's revisions, adopted from the accessory dwelling bylaw, address concerns that the amnesty bylaw would threaten the single family character of Cohasset. The Advisory Board also recommended the article unanimously. The Planning Board initially voted 2 to 1 to not recommend the article, but are expected to revote after taking revision into consideration on Saturday.

The town's smoking bylaw also stands to be revised. The new version, drafted by the Board of Health, would eliminate the issuance of variances, make smoking illegal in any public place or workplace, and even bring the smoking ban outdoors — lighting up would not be allowed within 20 feet of any entrance to a workplace and would also be prohibited in outdoor patio areas at restaurants. Selectmen voted unanimously and the Advisory Board by majority to recommend the article.

Residents at Town Meeting will also decide whether to rezone land behind Cohasset Plaza and Stop & Shop so that owner Donald Staszko can have enough room to develop more retail space. The article, filed by citizens' petition, would extend the Highway Business district back an additional 200 feet along Staszko's property. This will be the third time Staszko has brought the article before Town Meeting. In 2001, it missed the necessary two-thirds approval by only four votes.

The rezoning would create about 29,000 square feet of new retail space and allow Stop & Shop to expand by 19,000 square feet. Staszko says the expansion will result in $1.1 million in tax revenues for the town over the next 10 years. He and Stop & Shop pledge to pay for a traffic signal at the intersection of Route 3A and Sohier Street if the article is approved. Selectmen and the Advisory Board voted unanimously to recommend the article, but the Planning Board has voted unanimously to not recommend it.

Nuclear power

The final article to be debated at Town Meeting is also a citizens' petition. Residents will decide whether the town should formally request that spent fuel rods at Pilgrim Power Station be placed in dry cask storage to reduce the plant's vulnerability to a terrorist attack. Currently, the rods are stored in a pool in the same building as the power station's main reactor. Proponents of the article warn against the potential for disaster presented by of this type of storage. They say dry cask storage would disperse the rods and reduce the attractiveness of Pilgrim as a terrorist target.

A "yes" vote on this article would mean the town would ask the U.S. Nuclear Regulatory to require dry cask storage and would also ask local, state and federal officials to support the measure.

Selectmen voted unanimously to recommend the article a few weeks ago. But at Tuesday night's meeting, prompted by a letter from an opponent of the article, some worried that they may have voiced an opinion too quickly. Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan questioned whether the board was qualified to make a recommendation on such a technical issue.

"It's a problem when we only hear one side and we make a recommendation and then the other side comes forward," said Selectman Ronnie McMorris.

Selectmen will listen to opposition to the article at Town Meeting and may reconsider their recommendation. The Advisory Board is divided on the article after a 4 to 4 vote.

Here are some other articles scheduled for Town Meeting, all of which were recommended unanimously by both the Board of Selectmen and the Advisory Board.

- Article 9 would appropriate $40,000 for an ambulance to be shared with Scituate and Norwell and used as a backup to the ambulance operated by the fire department. The current shared ambulance was purchased in 1988 and needs replacement.
- Article 11 would appropriate $25,000 for the repair of a leaky roof in the 1929 wing of the former Osgood School, soon to be occupied by the Children's Discovery Museum, who will rent the space from the town.
- Article 13 will give property tax exemptions to certain veterans, seniors and blind people.
- Article 19 would establish the Water Department as an enterprise fund and allow them to be completely self-sufficient.
- Article 21 would impose new land use restrictions in Zone A, the area of land within 400 feet of Lily Pond and Aaron River Road and 200 feet from tributaries such as Peppermint Brook. The article would protect the town's drinking water supply and allow the town under state law to withdraw additional water from its surface water supply in the future.

Ledge bylaw article is ditched

Others for sewer, culvert postponed

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

The Planning Board voted unanimously last Wednesday to indefinitely postpone consideration of the so-called "ledge bylaw" article after both the Board of Selectmen and the Advisory Board voted by majority not to recommend it.

The article could still be discussed at Town Meeting this Saturday. A majority vote would reopen debate, and a two-thirds vote would be needed for approval. The Planning Board would need a majority vote to bring the article forward at a future Town Meeting.

The proposed bylaw would require a special permit for the removal of ledge eight feet in height or taller. The Zoning Board could deny a special permit if it found ledge removal would create drainage or public safety problems or be "detrimental to the character of the Town, locale or neighboring area." The bylaw would not apply to municipal projects, work relating to public utilities or repairs to existing septic systems.

Opinions on the bylaw reflect a divide among elected town officials on how the town should regulate land use.

Proponents say ledge is Cohasset's most unique natural asset. They say developers are more and more inclined to destroy it because the cost of blasting is cancelled out by the potential value of new homes.

Opponents, however, say the new bylaw would infringe on property rights. They say requiring a special permit to remove ledge is akin to regulating the removal of old trees or the colors one can paint a house.

The ledge bylaw was first introduced at Annual Town Meeting a year ago. Drafted as a citizens' petition, the article was brought forward primarily by residents who opposed plans to blast ledge on Beach Street to make way for a housing development. The article failed by 30 votes to get the necessary two-thirds approval.

Opinions on the bylaw reflect a divide among elected town officials on how the town should regulate land use.

Since then, authors of the bylaw have worked with the Zoning Advisory Committee to address residents' concerns. The Planning Board initially agreed to take up the article and sponsor it on this year's warrant.

But not all Planning Board members support the article. Member Bob Sturdy is a strong opponent, and Chairman Al Moore said he does not necessarily agree with the bylaw either. Moore said the board took up the article in order to help revise its language. He said if the bylaw had passed in the form it went to Town Meeting last year, it would have been overly restrictive.

This year, Moore said, it was the lack of overwhelming support from other town boards caused the Planning Board to postpone the article indefinitely.

"If the Selectmen and the Advisory Board had voted unanimously to recommend this, then I think we would have brought it to Town Meeting," Moore said.

Planning Board member Peter Pratt, perhaps the board's strongest supporter of ledge preservation, said he wanted to bring forward the article at fall Town Meeting as part of a "coherent package of zoning bylaw reform."

Also likely to be in that package, Pratt said, would be a bylaw that would trigger a site plan review for large homes, a bylaw that would allow apartments by right on the second floor of downtown businesses and a bylaw that would require all building permit applications circulated to the Board of Health, the Conservation Commission and the Planning Board.

"I'm not concerned about the majority of Selectmen not supporting this," Pratt said of the ledge bylaw. "The issue was there were so many moving pieces here that have not come together at the right time. I think it makes sense to bring it back in the fall, and to give all citizens a chance to kick the tires here, and not give elected officials a chance to speak up at the 11th hour."

The ledge bylaw was one of four articles that were indefinitely postponed on the warrant in the past two weeks.

- Two articles submitted by the Sewer Commission were also postponed, one of which was a request to borrow $300,000 for additional membrane cartridges to increase hydraulic capacity at the Sewer Treatment Plant. The second article was a request for funds to pay for the design and permitting for the construction of the Little Harbor and Atlantic Avenue Sewer Districts.
- A third article that was postponed would have appropriated $40,000 to pay for Cohasset's share of engineering designs to repair the West Corner Culvert on Route 228 on the town line with Hingham and Hull. Town Manager Mark Haddad said Hingham and Hull were not prepared to take on the project. If and when it does happen, the three towns would equally share the cost of design, while the state would fund the construction.

Planning Board, Water Commission argue against Avalon project

quality. Finally, DeRensis said., a review by the Department of Environmental Protection has shown the site is contaminated with hazardous waste, making it unsuitable for human occupancy.

"The legal consequences of it are that this project is dead on arrival," he said.

Turning to the Planning Board's case, DeRensis reviewed Avalon's requests for certain town bylaws to be waived. The Planning Board was opposed to waiving:

- a bylaw that would make the applicant shield lights at eye level,
- a bylaw that sets standards for access roads to subdivisions,
- a bylaw that regulates signage,
- a bylaw that prevents wastewater from being released into wetlands,
- a bylaw that requires onsite recharge of storm water, and
- a bylaw that would require a site plan approval.

The Planning Board requested that sidewalks be placed on both sides of the road within Avalon's development, that a pedestrian crossing light be placed at the entrance to the development connecting it to the other side of Route 3A, and that sidewalks be continued on the other side of Route 3A to the Cohasset Greenbush stop or the Jonathan Livingston Seagull Plaza. The board also called for sidewalks along Route 3A to Sohier Street and along Sohier Street to Fair Oaks Lane.

"Because this is a residential development and not a business development, there needs to be connectors to make this work," said DeRensis. "Without these, the site remains very isolated."

"It's isolated, but yet it's close enough to a lot of things to be very tempting," said Planning Board Chairman Al Moore. "I think it's just an open invitation, particularly for children, to leave the site on bicycle, on foot."

The Planning Board also argued the town has long intended the proposed site of Avalon's development to be for commercial use. The land is currently zoned for technology business and was recommended for commercial use as far back as 1961, when the town's first master plan was drafted.

DeRensis said the proposed site makes up 17 percent of the total land area zoned for business in the town. He said it represented 38 percent of the commercially zoned land available for development.

The Planning Board said Avalon's plans for an eight degree grade in the driveway were unacceptable. The board said the grade should be no more than six degrees, as stated in the bylaw. The board also said the development should have a second access way because its road was more than 1500 feet long. DeRensis said another access way would improve fire safety.

The Planning Board said fighting a fire could prove to be difficult at the proposed development because its buildings were close together and its elevation was above that of the town's water tank, meaning water pressure would be insufficient. The pressure issue could be solved by a pumping system, but the board cautioned the development might require so much water that they would prevent the town from being able to fight a fire in another location at the same time.

DeRensis said this could mean that Avalon needs its own emergency water supply. He said the state's Housing Appeals Committee had upheld a decision to deny a comprehensive permit because a proposed development would have created a fire hazard that outweighed the need for housing.

The Planning Board's final argument was that Avalon's development did not incorporate enough open space. The board said the site needed more walking areas for pets, trails through the woods or connections to the rest of the community.

DeRensis said Avalon's problems "cannot be solved by the imposition of conditions on the project." "The amount that has to be fixed becomes so big that the site becomes unusable for what Avalon wants to do," he said.

Scott Dale, Avalon's vice president of development, said the company had a plan to process all its wastewater at its own "package treatment plant" and avoid discharging into the Lily Pond watershed.

Dale also said Avalon intended to clean the site of all hazardous wastes and install water pumps to increase water pressure to acceptable levels.

Zoning Board Chairman Woody Chittick said the board would need time to review the material presented. "A lot of this is food for thought that we're going to have to really study and think about," he said.

Chittick said the issue of wastewater potentially effecting the town's drinking water would demand the utmost attention. "I think I speak for the board when I say this is the most serious and most consequential item in this proposal," he said.

CHS boys open season with visions of state title run

"This is a hard-working, level-headed team," said Cohasset High boys lacrosse head coach Kevin Orcutt, as he watched the 37 members of the Skippers varsity and JV squads go through first-week drills on Milliken Field. "They've got the skills and the experience to go after a Pilgrim League title and a state championship."

The Skippers — coming off two years in which they were Division Two finalists and quarterfinalists — return three Mariner All-Scholastics, seven starters and 15 lettermen as they prepare for the 2003 season April 4 opener against Pilgrim rival Scituate. This will be the first season that there will be a third division for postseason play, and "on paper" Cohasset should be a strong contender in the new small-school category.

"If we can do well in our league play, where we face the Division One (Duxbury) and Division Two (Hingham) state champs, then we should have success as well in the postseason," said third-year coach Orcutt, who has added former Boston College High School All-American defenseman Matt Rossi to his coaching staff. "But we're taking this a day at a time, maintaining our focus, trying to enjoy and get better with each practice."

Midfield Depth

The Skippers' strength starts at the midfield, where three seniors, co-captains Tom Anderson and Robert Hickey, and John Durkin, make up one of the area's most athletic and potent lines. Anderson, captain of both the football and hockey squads and hoping to play lacrosse next year at Connecticut College, split time a year ago between defense and midfield. He's full-time at midfield now, and, after scoring 29 goals the previous two seasons, could have a breakout offensive year. Hickey, a faceoff specialist who captained the soccer team and who's being recruited by Div. 1 Providence and Div. 3 Widener, had 16 goals in 2002. Durkin, the South Shore League's leading scorer in hockey this winter, has been the most pleasant surprise of the first week.

"Tom and Robert have been vocal, effective leaders and are working hard," said Orcutt, "but John has been unreal. He may be our best athlete. He's a workhorse and, in my opinion, the missing piece of our puzzle. I really expect a lot from him this spring."

Three other hockey standouts — juniors Mike Rasmussen and Mark Davis, and soph Joey Durkin — will make up the Skippers' second midfield line.

"Raz is making the move from attack," said Orcutt, "and we'll use him around the crease a lot on offense. Mark's made big strides from last

Tracking success

Cohasset boys hope they have enough for another title run

By Jim Logan
CORRESPONDENT

Winning a championship in the South Shore League is tough. Pulling off back-to-back banner seasons, as well as a two-year undefeated stretch—even tougher.

But a three-peat in the SSL? With nothing more than a goose egg still showing in the right hand-side of the win-loss column?

Let's just say, for the smallest boys track team in the league, the Skippers, each and every one of them, are gonna need one very big team effort if 2003 will follow its predecessors.

A huge showing that even Head Coach Al LaFontaine has to admit will be one large challenge for the locals this spring.

"We definitely have our work cut out for us this season," LaFontaine said. After 14 straight wins and consecutive SSL titles over the past 24 months, the Skippers look ahead to the 2003 campaign with defense of the crown in their hearts, but a looming reality also in their minds.

In the track and field game it takes not only quality, but also quantity.

"We're (typically) a small program to begin with, but it's even more so this year," LaFontaine said. A team, only 22 strong in 2002 must now take on the depth and breadth of the league's powerhouses sporting a mere 12 Skippers.

"I mean, with the guys we do have coming back, I feel good about what they can accomplish individually in their (particular) events," the coach continued. "They can win."

But, LaFontaine added. "This is a sport where, you need to be strong in the second and third-place spots too. And it's tough to win those points when you just don't have enough people out there to compete.

"What it really comes down to is utilizing the guys you have the best way you can. More than for the athletes, I think this will be a [challenging] coaching year."

Three athletes the Cohasset coach will be relying on heavily to make his job a bit easier in 2003 are tri-captains Ian Kidder, Jared Krupczak, and Eric Belz. The former two are seniors. Eric is a junior.

Lady laxers eye another big score

By Lou Molinari

Scoring goals should not be a problem for the Cohasset High girls lacrosse team this season. That's good news.

Defense should not be a big problem for the skippers this season. More good news for Cohasset coach Torin Sweeney.

Put it altogether, and it simply means the Cohasset girls lacrosse team appears to be in a very good position.

Coach Sweeney will be starting his second season at the helm, after leading his Skippers to an 11-11 season last year and a first round tourney win.

One of the Skippers who made the tourney possible is senior Maura McKenney, who is returning as one of the four captains on the team. Maura scored 53 goals last season, one of the biggest individual scoring efforts in the area.

The scoring machine plays center on the team.

To go along with the 53 goals by Maura, Cohasset will also be returning junior Nicole Turgiss, who scored 25 goals last season.

"We should have a pretty good team," noted the coach. "We have all but four starters returning from last year's team."

The defense will be led by the three other captains, Catherine Coyne, Julie Lordan and goalie Gia Petrakis.

Last year's tourney season has also increased the number of players on the team to 27.

"We got a very good turnout and now we're looking to put together a junior varsity team as well," declared the coach. "There's no question a JV team would mean a lot to the program.

"We plan to schedule a 10-game (JV) season," said the coach.

Cohasset plans a 16-game varsity schedule, needing a .500 record to qualify again for tourney play.

Cohasset has no scrimmages planned at the present time as it prepares for the season opener against Cape Cod Academy on April 3.

They're baaack

High hopes abound as varsity softball returns to CHS

By Joel Racicot
JRACICOT@CNC.COM

Varsity softball is back at Cohasset High school for the first time in nine years. After posting an 11-4 record last season at the junior varsity level, it's now time to play with the big girls.

"We are really excited and looking forward to this season," noted head coach Deb Bostwick. "We have a new facility right on North Main Street, and thanks to the help form a lot of people this program is really starting to go in the right direction."

This year's team consists of 19 players, too little for a junior varsity team, and maybe too much for one varsity team.

"It's going to be tough for the new girls to get experience because right now we have a nucleus from last year that should get the bulk of the playing time," said Bostwick. "We have a lot of girls that just want to play and have some fun, and right now we will do the best we can to get everybody some playing time when the time is right."

The extremely young squad is made up of one senior, seven juniors, five sophomores and six freshmen.

The pitching staff consists of senior Heather Peraino, freshman Katie James, junior Caitlin Condon and freshman Jennifer Dinger.

"Heather will be our captain this year as well as our number one pitcher," said Bostwick. "Having four pitchers this year will really be a plus."

Juniors Danielle Pinkus (OF/IF), Casey Anderson (C.), Rachel Doyle (IF), Caitlin Gontarz (IF), Andrea Keating (IF) and Marisa Mello (OF), are all part of a strong core of players that should keep Cohasset competitive.

"I'm looking for those girls to lead the way now that they all have a year's experience," said Bostwick. "Danielle (Pinkus) should be big. Casey (Anderson) has a lot of talent and Doyle, Gontarz and Keating make up a solid infield. Marisa (Mello) is a great sport and really keeps the team morale up with her great attitude."

Cecelia Chapman, Molly Ogrodenik and Molly Liddell are three returning sophomores.

"All these girls get along great, and they really want to build this program and get a name for themselves," noted

Cohasset's Lindsay Grossman (right), the Lady Skippers lone South Shore League All-Star this season, was deservedly named an Honorable Mention for our team after a strong senior year. See the Mariner Girls All-Scholastic Basketball team on pages 16 and 17.

All-Scholastic girls basketball team

Cohasset's Grossman, Buckley and Langford named Honorable Mentions

As is always the case with these kinds of things, the selection process with this team was not an easy one.

Several of the young women you see listed below as "Honorable Mentions" received serious consideration for All-Scholastic acknowledgement.

In the end, however, we limited ourselves to a team of just 16, and, after consulting with area coaches, we do feel secure that we chose the top girls basketball players in Marinerland for this honor:

Sarah Cox - Senior (Capt.)
Forward - Norwell

Sarah Cox

This three-time Mariner All-Scholastic selectee was widely considered the top female basketball talent on the South Shore this winter…finished second in Eastern Mass in scoring with a 25.6 points per game average and wrapped up her high school career with 1,785 points…possesses the whole hoop package: size (5-feet-10), athleticism, top notch ball-handling and passing skills, and the ability to score from anywhere on the floor…four time South Shore League all-star…led the Lady Clippers to a 17-3 regular season and a South Shore League title, the third in Sarah's four years for the Lady Clippers…also a South Shore League all-star keeper for the NHS girls soccer team this past fall…Honor Roll student…will play basketball next year on full scholarship at Assumption College… leaning toward majoring in Communications… Norwell coach Bruce Emerson: "Sarah took it to another level this year. She was consistently sensational, but she simply took it to another level when we were challenged. She's just a remarkable athlete and person."

Katie Boutilier - Junior Center/Forward - Hingham

Katie Boutilier

A three-year starter at center/forward, Boutilier had a breakout season for the Harborwomen, who reached the quarterfinals of the Div. 2 South Sectional…A great rebounder and solid free throw shooter, Boutilier led the team in scoring with 9.5 ppg for the Patriot League runners-up (15-6, 10-2)…Often outsized in the middle, Boutilier never seemed phased consistently pulling down key rebounds (7.3 per game) for second-chance baskets…A unanimous PL All-star this season, Boutilier will be among the team's top returning players next year. Hingham coach Dave Hickey: "She made the team as a freshman and has really come into her own. She's a very tough kid and is going to be one of the premier players next season."

Amy Kulp - Senior Center - Hingham

It was a breakout season for this three-year varsity player…A Patriot League All-star, Kulp (6') was an undeniable presence inside the paint, adding new life to Hingham's once quiet inside game…A solid rebounder, Kulp averaged 7.5 per game to lead Harborwomen (15-6) en route to a second place finish in the PL (10-2)…Also a solid free throw shooter, Kulp and teammate Katie Boutilier provided one of the most effective inside games in the Patriot League and helped advance the team to the quarterfinals of the Div. 2 South Sectional tourney…She scored a team high 16 points in a one-point win over B-R in the Massasoit tourney and shut down the team's two six-foot starters. Hingham coach Dave Hickey: "Last year, she came off the bench, but by the third game, she was really making strides. She was most improved last year and continued that this season."

Deirdre King - Senior (Capt.)
Point-Guard - Hingham

Deirdre King

A three-year Patriot League All-star and four-year starter, King capped her Hingham hoop career with another solid season…Speed and aggressiveness are among this player's best qualities, making her one of the best penetrators on the South Shore…She was also key to the Harborwomen's (14-7) trapping defense (3 steals per game), which helped land the team in quarterfinals of the Div. 2 South Sectional…Offensively, lack of size never stopped King (7.5 ppg, 3.5 assist per game) from taking the ball inside, while her short-range jumpers also proved effective. Hingham coach Dave Hickey: "She's a great athlete and a very unselfish player. She can bring the ball up under any kind of pressure and create her own shots and for others."

Lauren Murphy - Senior (Capt.)
Guard - Hingham

Lauren Murphy

Unquestionably one of the best defenders on the South Shore, Murphy shut down just about everyone who came in her path…Fellow All-Scholastic Melissa Murphy, B-R's standout guard, and Duxbury's Carlie Harrington were among her victims, holding all well below their averages…An underrated offensive player, Murphy's average 6 points per game were usually scored primarily in the big ones, particularly her game-winning 3-pointer in the closing seconds in Hingham's (14-7, 10-2 PL) win over B-R in the Massasoit tourney…Received the team's "Unsung Hero" award this year…Murphy also plays soccer and lacrosse at HHS and plans to attend Tufts University. Hingham coach Dave Hickey: "Athletically, nobody touches her. She's an absolutely fearless defender. She's great in the open court because she anticipates so much. She can cover 3/4 of the court by herself."

Carolyn King - Senior (Capt.)
Forward/guard - Hanover

Carolyn King

A four-year varsity player and three-year starter for the Lady Indians (9-11), King was the team's leading scorer again this season, averaging 12.6 ppg…Used as a small forward and guard, the Patriot League All-star was successful both driving to the hoop or launching a trey (47 percent, 30-of-63)…Also a consistent free-throw shooter, King averaged 70 percent at the line and pulled down 7.6 rebounds per game…A member of the National Honor Society, King is also a standout field hockey and softball player at HHS…She plans to attend college. Hanover coach Judy Schneider: "Carolyn can just do it all. She's scored in double figures every year. She can post up inside and shoot threes. She's a great player."

Lindsey Arria - Sophomore
Point-guard - Hanover

Just a sophomore, Arria is already a two-year starter at point-guard for Hanover…An extremely athletic player, Arria's speed, shooting ability, and aggressive defensive play proved invaluable for the Lady Indians (9-11)…A Patriot League All-star, Arria averaged 10 ppg, while also averaging four steals and 4.5 assists per game… Arria was a 71 percent free throw shooter this season…Also a standout soccer and softball player at HHS, Arria will be among the team's top returning players. Hanover coach Judy Schneider: "Lindsey is quickly becoming a real good point-guard. She's still learning and is gaining a great deal of confidence. She's very coachable and is a real smart kid."

Lindsey Arria

Melissa Murphy - Senior (Capt.)
Point-guard - Rockland

Melissa Murphy

What can you say about a player like Murphy… In the Rockland (14-7, 8-4 PL) organization since the 8th grade, Murphy scored her 1,000th career point this season, finishing with 1,118 overall…Blistering speed was this point-guard's biggest asset, making her very difficult to contain…The team's leading scorer with 17.1 ppg, while adding five steals per game…The three-time Patriot League All-star was deadly on a fast break, and from behind the arch, and was always the first one down the court in transition…Murphy was a freshman on RHS's Div. 3 State Championship team in 2000…She also led the RHS cheerleading squad to back-to-back state titles and is a standout sprinter on the outdoor track team. Rockland coach Mal Lannin-Cotton: "We won't be able to replace Murphy next year. Much like (Liz) Martin this year, it will probably take a couple of players to do what Murphy did for us. She has a tremendous inside and outside scoring ability."

Laura Goggin - Senior (Capt.)
Forward - Rockland

Not necessarily a flashy scorer, Goggin's workhorse mentality has helped key Rockland's success over the years…A three-time Patriot League All-star and three-year starter on the Lady Bulldogs' (14-7, 8-4 PL) squad, Goggin is best known for her aggressive play inside the paint, despite routinely being outsized…A fierce rebounder and defender, Goggin notched the assist on teammate Melissa Murphy's 1,000th career point…Goggin (7.5 ppg, 6 rpg) is also a member of the RHS cheer squad, which won back-to-back state titles, and plays softball…She plans to attend college. Rockland coach Mal Lannin-Cotton: "Goggin takes an awful lot of pride and work ethic when she gets on the floor. She has a real solid game around the key box. She's been part of this program since the eighth-grade and will be a tremendous loss."

Laura Goggin

Meghan Duffy - Senior (Capt.)
Forward - Marshfield

Meghan Duffy

A two-time Old Colony League All-star, Duffy has been the Lady Rams' (9-11) leading scorer for the last two seasons…Her 13.1 ppg placed her among the top five in the league…A very aggressive and versatile player, Duffy also averaged 10 rebounds per game…A three-year starter at forward, Duffy is a relentless worker, putting in extra practice time to work on free throw shooting, according to her coach, the results of which were clear in the final 10 games of the season, in which she averaged 89 percent from the line…Duffy is also a standout field hockey and tennis player at MHS. Marshfield coach Rick Fredericks: "Meghan is a leader on and off the floor. She's a great kid and a real hard worker. We're certainly going to miss her."

Erin Curran - Sophomore
Point-guard - Abington

Erin Curran

After seeing limited action last season, Curran was the team's leading playmaker this year…Just a sophomore, Curran is already playing well beyond her years, leading the Green Wave (12-7) in scoring this season with 11.1 ppg…She also led the team in 3-pointers, hitting 28 and in assists with 4.5 per game…Quickness and athleticism are among Curran's greatest qualities on the court both offensively and defensively…She helped lead the rebuilding Abington squad to a respectable third-place finish in the South Shore League (8-4) and tourney berth in the Div. 3 South Sectional…Also a midfield/keeper on the AHS soccer team, Curran will be among the top returning players to the hoop team. Abington coach Mike Mayhew: "Erin was very important to all of our wins. She made some big baskets when we needed them. She's still developing her game and is going to be a great player."

Erica Murphy - Senior (Capt.)
Forward - Weymouth

Erica Murphy

With much of the team being underclassmen, Murphy was called upon to play a variety of positions and did so for the better of the team…A Bay State League All-star, this two-year starter averaged 11 ppg for the Lady Wildcats (8-12)…Her eight rebounds per game also led the team this season…Voted the Most Valuable Player by her teammates, Murphy was the only senior on the squad this year…Primarily a forward, Murphy was also used at point-guard and at several different defensive posts…Murphy plans to continue her basketball career at Western Kentucky. Weymouth coach Steve Shoff: "Erica had a very good senior year. She was a big leader on the floor. She's so strong and is a great leaper, which allowed her to guard some pretty big girls."

Stephanie Geehan - Freshman
Power Forward - Braintree

Stephanie Geehan

This freshman emerged quickly as a force in the paint for the Lady Wamps this winter, leading them to a surprising 13-7 record in what was supposed to be a rebuilding season…averaged a team best 11.4 points and seven rebounds per game… put her long arms, 5-feet-11 frame and excellent hoop sense to good use, blocking more than four shots per game…lone BHS player named a Bay State Conference first-team all-star…had a season high 24 points against Dedham, and a season high 19 rebounds versus Brookline…scored in double figures in 14 games…plays basketball year round as a member of the AAU Bay State Magic team…also a standout volleyball player for Braintree High this past spring…will play golf this spring for BHS… brother Jonathan Geehan, a BHS senior, was named a Mariner All-Scholastic for golf this fall…Braintree coach Nick Krot: "Stephanie is just one of those girls who has a nose for the ball. She's got unusually strong court sense for a freshman She's not terribly strong or anything, but she manages to block shots and grab rebounds by being in the right place. She finishes very well after grabbing offensive rebounds."

Katie Castignetti - Junior Guard - Braintree

Katie Castignetti

This junior swingman had to adjust on the fly to a new role this season, point guard, and her floor leadership was a major component in the Lady Wamps surprising 13-7 regular season and run to the second round of the state tourney…named a second team all-star in the 16-team Bay State Confer-ence… averaged 7.4 points and nearly four assists per game… had a season high 19 points against Framingham…two-year starter…an outstanding defender and team leader…played varsity soccer and softball at BHS in her freshman year, but decided after that to concentrate exclusively on basketball…plays basketball year round for the Bay State Magic…an Honors Students with a 3.5 GPA…has a rank of 49 in her class of 331…Braintree coach Nick Krot: "Katie was an extremely strong influence on our team. She's so mentally and physically tough. Although she didn't score a lot, she really made our offense go, and she was an exceptional defensive player who set the tone for us at that end of the floor."

Dominique Jones - Senior Center - Holbrook

Dominique Jones

Emerged as a major force in the paint this winter to play a key role in the Lady Bulldogs, playing a key in the Lady Bulldogs Mayflower League title run…the 5-foot-10 bruiser led the ML in rebounding, grabbing 13 caroms per game, which included a single game best of 30 rebounds…also led the team in scoring with 18.7 points per game…Mayflower League all-star…extremely adept at boxing out…a good post player who proved very difficult to knock off her shot down low…won a starting spot last year after transferring from Blue Hills … plays basketball year round in area leagues…would like to play college basketball…has been accepted to Johnson & Wales and Rhode Island College, and is still waiting to hear back from Northeastern…plans to major in Law Enforcement…Holbrook coach Kristi Bach: "The things that set Dominique apart are dedication and hard work. She was always fighting for position down low. She refused to back down, and she was very good at boxing out once she got the position. She works so hard in games and in practices, and that rubbed off on her teammates."

Jeanne Steele - Sophomore Point-Guard - Silver Lake

Jeanne Steele

The lone member of the SL girls basketball team named an Old Colony League all-star… the Lady Lakers struggled on offense this season, but this slick little playmaker was certainly not to blame…averaged 5.6 assists per game and had a direct hand in over one-third of the SL girls' points on the year…also a sensational defender who tied Alex Bradshaw for the team lead in steals…voted the team's Most Valuable Player by her teammates…father Dick Steele is the team's coach…Honor Roll student…plays AAU basketball year round…also a sensational soccer player who has played with the SL varsity squad since her freshman year…plays club soccer year round…also ran spring track in her freshman year…Silver Lake coach Dick Steele: "Jeanne did a very good job getting the ball up the floor and getting us into our offense. She really loves being the point guard and playmaker. She's a very good passer and defender. Obviously, it can be tough playing for your father, but the kids accepted her very well, and that really helped her."

Yearning for the outdoors

Gymnasium no place to begin CHS baseball rebuilding

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

Other than the placement of a few new scuff marks on the brand new Cohasset High gymnasium floor, there's not a whole lot to report at this point regarding the CHS baseball team.

The beginning of a new week brought with it the hope that the Skippers diamond gang could finally get outdoors to begin in earnest their preparations for the 2003 season, which gets underway officially a week from this coming Monday, April 7, with South Shore League rival Norwell coming to town (3:30 p.m. start).

Rain and melting snow contributed to impossibly sloppy conditions at Milliken Field last week, forcing all workouts to be conducted indoors, a far from ideal situation for any coach, but exponentially more so for a first year coach.

"I still really don't know much about what I have for ballplayers," said CHS "rookie" head baseball coach Al Gallotta this weekend. "It's so tough to get a read on players indoors; you really need to get them outdoors. Hopefully, the weather will cooperate this week, and I'll be able to really get into the evaluation process."

Of course, Gallotta will be helped along immeasurably in this time-constrained "process" by his 27-years of experience as a baseball coach. Gallotta comes to Cohasset High fresh off a 27-year coaching stint at Archbishop Williams, the last 25 years of which he also served as that school's Athletic Director.

Though hitting, fielding and even speed are nearly impossible to evaluate well in a gymnasium, pitching is a little easier to assess, so Gallotta did have a reasonable idea of where he stood in that area before heading outdoors.

Sophomore Ted Straughn, the younger brother of 2002 staff ace Tim Straughn (now at UMass-Amherst), appears the lead candidate to step into the number one hurler's role. Ted, like his older brother, plays AAU ball year round, and that's definitely given him a leg up in the early going, according to Gallotta.

Senior Mike Snowdale, who was in the regular starting pitcher rotation last year along with the two Straughns, is back looking for his old job.

Mike, who quarterbacked the CHS football team the last two years, will be looking to fend off the challenges of fellow seniors Chris McKenna and Terry Baroudi, who are both returning to the baseball program after one-year absences. Both are coming off fantastic wrestling seasons that saw them each garner Mariner All-Scholastic selections last week.

Baroudi, who sat out baseball last year due to shoulder surgery, has caught coach K's eye with his control. McKenna, a lefty who is also a lead candidate to start in centerfield, has made an impression with his velocity.

"I imagine all four of those guys will be called on pretty heavily to pitch," said Gallotta. "They've all looked pretty good so far, but until you get them outside against some live hitting and in scrimmages, it's tough to say."

That kind of uncertainty for Galotta went double and then some for the rest of his positional players after a week's worth of indoor work. In fact, coach Galotta said he did not feel comfortable commenting yet on any other players on his team.

"It just wouldn't feel comfortable and it wouldn't be fair to the kids to comment based on what I've seen so far," he said. "We can talk next week. I should have a much better idea then."

One thing we can report is that the number of players is up dramatically this season. There was not enough interest to support a JV team last year, and the season ended, reportedly, with just 14 players in the program. This year, 36 Cohasset High students signed up for baseball, and 32 are currently still in the mix.

This is a circumstance many feel is related directly to the impeccable reputation Gallotta brings with him from Archbishop Williams—a reputation that has, if anything, gained only more luster in his short time with the Cohasset High players.

"Coach Gallotta's practices are so well organized and well run," assessed sophomore hopeful Brendan Barry. "It doesn't take long at all to see that he and coach (assistant Damien) D'Angelo really know what they're doing."

year, while Joey is a natural who's going to be very good."

The Skippers, for the first time in Orcutt's tenure, will be able to run a third line of middies, comprised of juniors Mike Hajjar, Dwayne Morris and Ryan Tufts.

"Mike is an experienced player with good stickwork," said Orcutt, "and Dwayne is a tremendous athlete who improves every day. Ryan transferred this year from Xaverian, and from what I've seen is very quick and has a great work ethic."

Standout Attack

Two Mariner all-stars and senior co-captains lead the Cohasset attack. Soccer captain Curt Kahn and Matt Davis — a hockey captain and a 2001 Pilgrim League all-star as a soph midfielder — combined for 75 goals last spring. Kahn, with 143 career points, has already committed to play for Trinity College while Davis, with 90 points in his first three years, will be continuing his career at Ursinus College in the tough Div. 3 Centennial Conference. They'll be joined by soph Jake Previte, a highly skilled playmaker who had nine goals as a freshman.

"The attack unit is one of the best in the league without question," said Orcutt. "Curt is a regional all-star who's played in national competition up and down the East Coast. He had 52 goals last year, and most of them came when we needed them. He steps up in big games and responds to pressure. Matt is an exceptional dodger and gives one hundred percent at every practice. We moved him to attack because of his ability to create his own shot. Those two, working together, are going to give us plenty of scoring opportunities. Even though Jake's a sophomore, I expect a lot out of him, because he's got the talent. He's good off either hand, and is both a playmaker and a shooter."

Adding depth to the attack will be sophs Sam Steele, an exceptional player at Derby Academy in 2002, Jon Grimm and Jake Kovach, and freshman Aidan Buick.

"On any given day," said Orcutt, "three will probably play in the JV game, and the fourth will dress for the varsity. Who goes where will be decided on how they've been practicing."

Cohasset Co-captain Tom Anderson (white shirt) is a big part of a midfield that may be one of the best in the Pilgrim Conference this season.

Dominating Defense

The Skippers defense will be led by two-time captain and Mariner all-star Nick Spirito, who has committed to ninth-ranked Div. 3 power Nazareth. He'll be joined by senior Ben Lynner, who captained both the football and basketball teams, and by juniors Mike Devine, a hockey all-star, and Stephen Davis. Junior Dan Roth should also find playing time at close defense.

"Nick is one of the top three defenders in our league one-on-one," said Orcutt. "He was picked for the eastern Massachusetts underclassmen all-star game last spring and — along with Curt, Robert and Matt Davis— won a gold medal this summer in the Bay State Games. Nick is tenacious, and he's getting a lot of help from coach Rossi in terms of discipline on when to slide to the open man or the man with the ball. He could be great this season.

"Ben is much quicker this spring, playing at about 205," Orcutt continued. It's really only his second year, and coach Rossi is helping him with understanding game tactics. He's going to be solid. So are Mike and Stephen. Mike's just got great instincts and is a wonderful, quiet leader by example. And Stephen's attitude is fantastic. He's working hard."

At longstick midfielder will be senior Evan Pestone, a soccer captain, and junior Conor Buick, the soccer captain for next fall. Soph Casey Coleman could also see time at the position.

"Evan switched from shortstick this season," said Orcutt, and he's been looking great. He's handling the ball well, and he's one of our fastest athletes. He's showing great intensity. Conor's stepped up from last year too, and this position is going to be one of our strengths."

In the Goal

After two years as a back-up to all-star Kyle Weber, junior Nick Murphy will take over the starting role in the goal. In the previous two seasons, Murphy appeared in 19 games, one as the starter, and made 59 saves while allowing 32 goals for a .648 save percentage. In the off-season, Murphy anchored a Cohasset indoor team that three times made the Top Gun League championship game and was twice named Player of the Week. Backing him up will be soph Chris Simms and freshman Ben Libby, who will also share JV goaltending duties.

"Nick's been doing a great job, and his hard work in the off-season is paying off," said Orcutt. "He's seeing the ball well, and finding the open man on the clears. He's also getting great competition from Chris and Ben. I'm very pleased with our goalie situation."

The Skippers have a 16-game schedule, and two pre-season contests. The first was scheduled for Wednesday, against the new Quincy/North Quincy combined team, playing its first varsity season. On Saturday, Cohasset will travel to New Bedford for a jamboree featuring public and private school teams from Massachusetts and Rhode Island.

"We've got ambitious goals this season," concluded Orcutt, "but we've also got simple ones. We want to get the most out of each day. For the first week, that's been true."

"We'll count on those three for their leadership, as well as their abilities and their flexibility, especially the flexibility," LaFontaine stated. "I'm going to really need that from them this year,"

Others the Skippers are looking toward this season are seniors Adrian Batson and Braun Goodson, and junior Nick Parker, along with underclassmen Pete Bunstein (sophomore) and Marc Bouchard (freshman).

Each bring strength and solidity to their usual, respective events. Now it's hoped they can bring that same level of winning into other areas.

Still, the question remains: regardless of the talented pool of athletes Cohasset has, will the waters be deep enough to ride one more championship and undefeated wave in 2003?

Coach LaFontaine will hold off a bit longer before making that call.

"I'm going to wait and see (before that prognostication)," he said. "I think I'll have a better idea where we'll stand as a team after we've gone through our first couple of meets and I get to see who's in the league."

That time for judgment starts next week, when the Skippers take on Rockland and Hull in a tri-meet at home (April 1 in a non-league contest), then host Norwell on Wednesday—in the SSL opener.

"We have a nice mixture of veteran players and youngsters, who will learn a lot from players like McKenney and Turgiss," commented the coach.

Bostwick. "Our realistic goal is to get six or more wins, maybe finish at .500. That would be great."

Cohasset will play in the notably competitive South Shore League.

"Hanover, Abington and Norwell could all be tough," acknowledged Bostwick. "Hopefully, we can get some confidence playing against other young teams like Holbrook, Hull and South Shore Christian."

As for last years impressive 11-4 record, the team knows this season will be no cakewalk.

"We just need to take things a base and an inning at a time and make realistic goals," noted Bostwick. "We know that this is going to be different being in a varsity league and we are just hoping to stay enthusiastic and have some fun."

LIBRARY CORNER

New address

Please note: The Paul Pratt Memorial Library has changed its address from 106 South Main St. to 35 Ripley Road.

Brancale art is on exhibit

Joan Brancale, a gallery artist with South Shore Art Center, will have an exhibit of her most recent oil paintings at Cohasset's new Paul Pratt Memorial Library now located in the former Osgood Elementary School at 35 Ripley Road. The show, "Winterbreak," will feature local South Shore landscapes. This will be the inaugural exhibit at the new library which opened March 3, and the show will remain until April 26.

Many of the paintings for "Winterbreak" are local Hingham and Cohasset scenes, developed in the artist's studio this past January and February, working from plein-air studies, thumbnail sketches and her own photographs. For a landscape painter, this "winter break" of working inside provided an opportunity to focus more on memory and emotional intent. A moment outside caught in a sketch or photograph is extended and altered in the process of painting.

Brancale's art career began as a professional set designer and muralist. Having received her MFA in Design from Tisch School of the Arts at New York University she designed and painted scenery in New York City before moving to the Boston area. Over the years she has continued to work in theatre as well as creating murals for residential and commercial interiors. Her profession developed skills that have proved useful as a fine artist.

Painting on location throughout the South Shore and Cape Cod offers Brancale the opportunity to savor nature's gifts. Stories are often waiting to unfold in her work, the mood of the moment highlighted by sensitive use of color and detail.

WORSHIP NOTES

Prayers for peace

Saint Stephen's since 1990 has prayed continuously for world peace every Wednesday at 5:30 p.m. in their chapel. The fighting that has begun in Iraq calls directly upon this ministry of prayer for servicemen and women and for the innocent especially the children in Iraq. Prayers are for our troubled world and for all God's people everywhere — for peace, forgiveness and reconciliation. Jesus asks prayers for one another and for enemies as well. Prayer can unite people globally in a way nothing else can. In a 20-minute Wednesday service of Evening Prayer, all innocent victims of war, those who serve sacrificially in the armed forces, all relief and disaster agencies, hospital and care providers, chaplains, the media personnel who influence so much in the world, the President and all in authority, the United Nations and all who work for peace with compassion and justice all over the world are prayed for.

"Lord, make us instruments of your peace." A prayer attributed to St. Francis (BCP, p. 833).

We are the light of the world we inhabit. It is our time to speak, act and be tender and powerful....come bring your light to the dark, warmth to the chill." Call for details and to register 781-383-9184. Registration is $195 and includes three meals. This workshop is being sponsored by the Spirituality and Healing forum of the Second Congregational Church of Cohasset.

Free 10-week Alpha course

Alpha is a free, 10-week course that has been significant for people all over the world. It is a practical introduction to the Christian faith and Alpha tries to answer the questions:

"What is the point of life?...What happens when we die?...What relevance does Jesus have for my daily life today?...How do we deal with guilt?" and more.

Each week, people meet together for a meal, a talk on topics such as, "Who is Jesus?" and "Why did Jesus die?" and "How can I be sure that Jesus really rose from the dead?" and "Does God still heal today?".

People who take the Alpha course come from many backgrounds and for many reasons. Protestant and Catholic clergy have remarked that Alpha has the greatest impact on the people who don't go to church.

Alpha is for everyone: Catholics, Protestants, atheists and agnostics; those who want to investigate Christianity; those who want to brush up on the basics; and those who feel they've never really "got going" as a Christian.

For more information on Alpha, please call 781-383-6792.

Life after 'Ally'

Vonda Shepherd makes tour stop in Plymouth

By R. Scott Reedy
CORRESPONDENT

When a long-running television series is canceled, its cast members are often devastated.

But when "Ally McBeal" ended its five year run in 2001, Vonda Shepherd was actually relieved.

"I appreciated that job immensely. It was a blast and I certainly got a lot out of it, but I was also ready for it to be over," explained Shepherd by telephone from Scranton, PA. last week. "Now, I just want to be an artist."

After five years of performing on the series, arranging its music and producing segments featuring big-name musical guest stars, the singer, songwriter and producer was eager to return to her solo career. Shepherd, 39, brings her current US concert tour to Plymouth Memorial Hall on Saturday night.

"What I did before 'Ally McBeal' was write songs, record albums and tour. And during the time I was on the show, I kept very focused on writing. I learned so much working on 'Ally,' but at the same time I dwelled in a parallel creative universe with my writing."

During her last year or so of the series, Shepherd was also writing the 11 songs that appear on her new CD "Chinatown," recently released on her own record label, Jacket, and distributed by Navarre. Shepherd co-produced the album with her longtime collaborator, Mitchell Froom.

"'Chinatown' is like what I've done since I was 14," says Shepherd. "It is very autobiographical. The songs are all about real life — the high points and the heartbreak, the lost opportunities and the sweet fulfillment. One of my goals when I write is to create a world of my own in the music, to capture a space where I can feel completely lost. I love nature and I love the city, and I try to fuse these two extremes."

The California native was just a teenager when she got her first gigs as a singer and pianist in the Los Angeles area. By 21, she was touring as a backup singer and keyboardist for Rickie Lee Jones. During this time, Shepherd recorded the Top 10 duet hit "Can't We Try" with Dan Hill. Throughout the 1980s and '90s, Shepherd was busy on the road and as a session musician working with everyone from Jackson Browne to Al Jarreau while also releasing her own albums.

Boosted by the success of her time on the former Fox series "Ally McBeal," Vonda Shepherd has taken her act on the road. She performs at Plymouth's Memorial Hall Saturday night.

It was while performing on the Southern California club circuit, that Shepherd was "discovered" by "Ally McBeal" Executive Producer David E. Kelley who hired her as musical director and featured performer on his Fox-TV series. One of Shepherd's primary tasks was to give musical voice to the many highs and lows of Calista Flockhart's character (Ally) through a range of standards and original compositions.

"What I did before 'Ally McBeal' was write songs, record albums and tour. And during the time I was on the show, I kept very focused on writing. I learned so much working on 'Ally,' but at the same time I dwelled in a parallel creative universe with my writing."
Singer/songwriter Vonda Shepherd

"I worked with so many different styles of songs in all kinds of situations. The entire experience really gave me confidence as a producer."

The confidence came in handy when it was time for Shepherd to produce the many musical guest stars who visited the fictional Boston law firm — from Randy Newman, Gladys Knight, Chubby Checker, Barry Manilow, Jennifer Holiday and Al Green to Sting.

"Working with some of these people was just amazing. As a kid, I played Al Green's albums three times a day. It was a high point of my life just to get to meet him. And, of course, Sting. I've loved his music forever, too. It was really trippy to actually

Chris brings home Oscar®

Kingston resident Chris Cooper earned Hollywood's top honor Sunday at the 75th Annual Academy Awards® where he won a best supporting actor Oscar® for his critically acclaimed role in Adaptation.

Cooper's toothless orchid hunter beat out supporting roles played by Ed Harris (The Hours), Paul Newman (Road to Perdition), John C. Reilly (Chicago), and Christopher Walken (Catch Me If You Can).

Cooper, who last month took home the best supporting actor award at the Golden Globes® was favored to win the Oscar® by many industry experts.

This was the first Academy Award nomination and award for the prolific and understated actor who has had roles in a host of recent Hollywood hits including "American Beauty," "The Patriot" and "The Bourne Identity."

Wearing one of the peace pins many celebrities donned for the somber awards ceremony, tempered by the U.S. war with Iraq, Cooper ended his acceptance speech with a plea for peace.

"In light of all the troubles in this world, I wish us all peace," said Cooper, who in accepting the honor thanked everyone from the "Academy to the womb that bore me." Cooper paid credit to fellow nominees saying "It's a pleasure to be thought in your company" and thanked everyone involved in Adaptation — which he called the most enjoyable job he ever had. An emotional Cooper also paid special tribute to his wife, Marianne.

Local officials and friends of the Coopers were thrilled with the actor's big win.

"He's such an extraordinarily gifted artist who has breathed life into some very outstanding roles," said Silver Lake Regional School Committee member Brian Caseau, who admitted he is more familiar with his friend as a husband and father than an esteemed and award-winning Hollywood actor.

Kingston resident Chris Cooper shows off his Oscar® statue at Sunday's 75th Anniversary Academy Awards® ceremony. Cooper took home the best supporting actor award for his role in Adaptation.

"We're extremely happy for him and profoundly proud of this outstanding accomplishment," he said. "In the annals of cinematic history, there will always be Chris W. Cooper."

Nashville recording stars play Memorial Hall

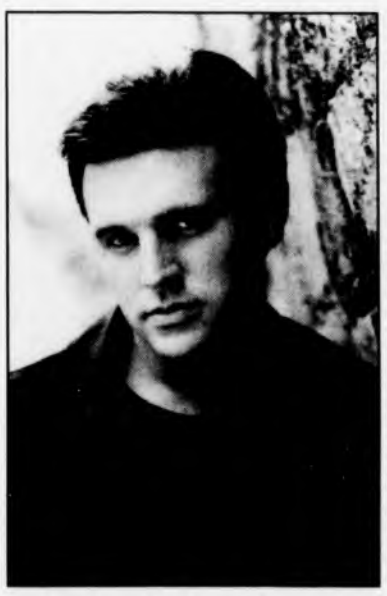
By Matt Whorf
CORRESPONDENT

America's music comes to America's hometown. That's how some of the area's hardest-core country music fans might describe the all-star country double-bill coming to Plymouth Memorial Hall this Friday.

The show brings to Plymouth two of Nashville's hottest ACM (Academy of Country Music) artists currently riding the country charts in veteran headliner Mark Wills and relative newcomer Blake Shelton. The performers have combined credits of over 4 million albums sold, nine Top 5 singles including six #1's, 7 Top 5 videos including 4 #1's, and numerous ACM and other industry association awards and nominations.

Bill-topper Wills has been making hit albums and singles since 1998, and currently has five albums since the release of his first Greatest Hits package last November. His major breakthrough came in '99, when he took home that year's ACM award for Top New Male Vocalist. Since then it's been a solid winning streak for the Cleveland-born, Georgia-raised singer/guitarist, with five #1 country singles, including the latest chart-topper, the post-baby boomer, 1970s-80s nostalgia rave-up, "19 Somethin'," one of two new tracks on the Greatest Hits disc.

Country artists Blake Shelton (above) and Mark Wills (below) perform Friday at Plymouth's Memorial Hall.



Opener Shelton is currently on the road in support of his newly released second CD, The Dreamer, the much-anticipated follow-up to his 2001 self-titled debut disc. That album made for an impressive, gold-selling national breakthrough for the Oklahoma native, and even put the singer in the country record books as the disc's single, the cleverly scripted phone-tag and answering machine melodrama, "Austin," set a new maximum for the genre by spending five weeks at #1. The follow-up single, "Ol' Red," the tale of a prison inmate who befriends the warden by taking care of his dog - the title character, also spawned a #1 CMT (Country Music Television) video.

"It's up to the artist to take the songs and make them their own. They go out and find the great songs, but then, they have to make them theirs and into something special. Otherwise, they're just karaoke cowboys," muses Wills, 29, in a current publicity release, reflecting on his career and the release of his Greatest Hits.

Wills will be onstage with his regular touring band, which he has dubbed the Nokintobob Band, so named as to denote "no kin to Bob Wills," the legendary Texas swing fiddler and bandleader. Mark Wills' actually given name is Daryl Mark Williams, which he shortened to his trademark moniker to avoid confusion with another country singer named Mark Williams working the same Atlanta club scene as Wills in the mid 90s.

Together, Wills and Shelton offer a dynamic contrast performing on the same bill. Wills is more of the romantic country crooner type, naming artists such as Conway Twitty, Ronnie Milsap and Keith Whitley as his main influences. Shelton's style is bolder, more in the good-timing, beer-drinking, honky-tonking mode, with singers like Hank Williams Jr. and Travis Tritt cited as major influences. Both performers are multi-dimensional, however, diversifying between ballads and uptempo numbers as well as country styles and moods.

Updating noodle casseroles

THE KITCHEN DETECTIVE

CHRISTOPHER KIMBALL

Jean is a Vermonter and lives across the dirt road from our farmhouse. Over the years she has treated us to a variety of unexpected main courses from a woodchuck stew (the beast had been caught that morning in a trap) to four gray squirrels, skinned, boned and served up in a traditional Brunswick stew, to a dish that I thought had been relegated to the history books many years before, turkey Tettrazini. I'm not much for casseroles featuring heavy cream sauces slathered over noodles, meat, and vegetables. Flavors get lost and the dish is too heavy for my taste. But this casserole was good eating; spaghetti coated with a light sauce, studded with large chunks of moist turkey, topped with toasted breadcrumbs. It was satisfying but not heavy and easy to make.

I went back to my cookbook library and pulled out American Cookery by James Beard and found his version that he claimed was named after a San Francisco gourmand and opera singer around the turn of the century. I tested Beard's version as well as a few others and finally settled on a basic formula. Instead of basing the sauce on a béchamel (flour, butter, milk) which I found too heavy, I used a velouté instead (flour, butter, chicken stock). A dash of sherry and some grated Parmesan also improved flavors as did a little lemon juice and some freshly grated nutmeg. I also doubled the amount of meat (earlier versions were mostly pasta) and followed Beard's advice about cooking in a shallow dish in a hot oven. This helps to solve the problem with casserole cookery; the ingredients have to be cooked twice which ruins texture and reduces flavor. I admit, this recipe won't be featured by Weight Watcher's anytime soon, but if you have the courage to indulge upon occasion, this beats the standard weeknight fare of pasta with butter and cheese.

MASTER RECIPE FOR NOODLE CASSEROLE

This recipe works best with chicken or turkey and spaghetti, which is then a recipe for Tettrazini. According to James Beard, the name comes from a famous turn of the century opera singer who was partial to both pasta and large quantities. Note that this dish is not baked covered for a long time. For a fresher, less sodden texture and flavor, it is best to use a shallow baking dish, no cover, and a very hot oven. The ingredients warm quickly and the bread crumbs brown nicely. If done properly, this is quite a good dish, not just a way to make do with leftovers. Don't be stingy with the salt and pepper. This dish needs aggressive seasoning.

8 tablespoons (1 stick) butter plus extra for greasing baking dish
1/2 cup fresh bread crumbs, toasted preferred
2 cups sliced white button mushrooms
1 cup onion, diced
Freshly ground black pepper to taste
1/2 pound spaghetti, macaroni, or any similar pasta
1/2 cup flour
2 cups low-sodium chicken stock, homemade preferred
3 tablespoons dry sherry
1/2 cup grated Parmesan cheese
1/2 teaspoon freshly grated nutmeg
1/2 teaspoon salt
2 teaspoons lemon juice
4 cups boned leftover meat (chicken or turkey preferred) cut into bite-size chunks

1. Heat oven to 450 degrees. Heat pot of salted water. Butter a shallow casserole or baking dish. Melt 2 tablespoons butter and toss with fresh breadcrumbs. Melt 2 tablespoons butter in a skillet and when hot, add mushrooms and onions. Sauté over medium heat, stirring frequently, until the mushrooms release their juices and start to squeak when stirred. Season with plenty of salt and freshly ground black pepper to taste. Remove to a large bowl.

2. Snap strands of spaghetti in half and add to the boiling water. Cook until al dente, about 7 minutes. Reserve 1/4 cup of cooking liquid, drain spaghetti, and return to pot with the reserved liquid.

3. While spaghetti is cooking, heat 4 tablespoons butter in a medium saucepan. When foam subsides, whisk in the flour over medium heat for 1 minute or until mixture loses the scent of raw flour. Add the chicken stock and cook over medium-high heat, whisking constantly until mixture thickens, about 3 to 4 minutes. Remove from heat and whisk in the next 5 ingredients. Add sauce to bowl along with meat. Mix.

4. Add spaghetti to the bowl and mix well. Taste and adjust seasonings if necessary; be generous with the salt. Pour mixture into baking dish and sprinkle buttered breadcrumbs on top. Place in preheated oven for 8 minutes until breadcrumbs brown and mixture is bubbly. Serve at once.

be working with Sting."

It was also very good for Shepherd's record sales. Her CD "Songs from Ally McBeal" went quintuple platinum, with worldwide sales of more than 12 million copies. The show's popularity also helped make hits of two other Shepherd CD's "Heart and Soul: New Songs from Ally McBeal" and "Ally McBeal: For Once In My Life." The series' success has been good for Shepherd's concert career, too.

"Before 'Ally,' I was performing for maybe 35 people a night in clubs near LA Now, I'm playing all over the world and in much larger venues," she admits. "I like variety so my current show is pretty dynamic. It has an intimate section of just me at the piano, then a section of R&B covers with my band, then some music from my nine albums including 'Chinatown.'"

Shepherd is keenly aware that concert-goers may have a lot on their on their minds these days, because of the military conflict in Iraq.

"I do a song called "Lucky Life" which is all about being grateful for what you have. I haven't been too sure recently what the mood of my audiences will be, but they really seem to appreciate the song's message. Prepare your landscapes for springtime

Green thumbs up

By Suzanne Mahler
CORRESPONDENT

Patches of snow still linger in the shadiest corners of my landscape but in barely a week's time, the landscape has been miraculously transformed from a winter wonderland into a promising springtime setting. With the passing of the vernal equinox, gardeners emerge refreshed and revived, ready to embark upon a new growing season. Having endured an especially challenging winter, even the least horticulturally minded homeowner eagerly awaits the glory of spring this year. The slightest hint of color would be a welcome relief after nearly six months of stark silhouettes, prolonged snow cover, and the drab browns and grays of winter, but Mother Nature will soon reward our patience with a kaleidoscope of breathtaking splendor as our awakening landscapes magically burst into bloom. The warmth of the sun and the extended daylight hours beckon us forth to stroll our grounds, enjoy the exhilarating spring air, and begin the process of spring cleaning our yards and gardens.

Along my back walkway, a solitary crocus opens each morning to greet the warm sunshine; its satiny white blossom, delicately striped with purple veins, glistens in the bright sunlight. Clusters of plump buds surround this lone harbinger of spring suggesting a bouquet of blooms will soon follow. The tips of daffodil foliage have appeared here and there, their pointed leaves pushing their way up through the damp, dark earth creating telltale mounds among the matted, decaying leaves.

Nearby, the spikes of a winter heath, Erica carnea 'December Red', have finally emerged from beneath a heavy blanket of crusty snow. Its long-lasting clusters of pretty purplish pink bells are a welcome touch of color against the rich, deep dark green needle-like foliage that persists throughout the winter months. Heaths offer a wide range of bloom seasons and colorful flower and foliage possibilities. While most prefer well drained, acidic soils in full sun, these winter heaths are tolerant of a little shade.

The foliage of rhododendrons and evergreen shrubbery has changed virtually overnight from a sickly yellow-green pallor to a deep vibrant shade of green. Shrubs that seemed to be hopelessly bent and deformed by ice and snow are magically springing upright again, reaching for the warmth of the afternoon sun. Although a number of their branches were split or broken, the damage was surprisingly minimal and their reformation will require only minor spring pruning.

Heaths offer a wide range of bloom seasons and colorful flower and foliage possibilities.

The weather during early spring is always unpredictable featuring a roller coaster ride of highs and lows, often predominated by prolonged periods of cold and dampness only to be followed by instant summer-like weather. A warm, dry weekend may spark an overwhelming attack of spring fever and a sense that the lawn, garden and the entire landscape must be perfectly manicured all at once. To prevent a random, haphazard approach to your spring projects, take a few minutes to walk around your property and prepare a prioritized list.

A thorough cleanup of the perennial borders is often a first priority for many gardeners. Despite my best intentions, many of my gardens were not clipped, raked and weeded before wintry weather arrived last fall and winter storms scattered leaves and debris throughout. As bulbs and perennials emerge, it becomes more and more difficult and time-consuming to remove this litter. Soggy, decomposing plant material encourages diseases and slugs and may also suffocate developing foliage resulting in yellow leaves and rot. Treading on waterlogged soils should be avoided as this often results in compaction which eliminates the air in the soil essential for healthy root systems, but the removal of leaves, branches and debris from lawns and gardens should be undertaken as soon as time and conditions permit. Clumps of ornamental grasses should be sheared to within a few inches from the ground early in the season to minimize damage to new growth as it emerges.

As the end of March approaches, winter mulches can be eased away from the crowns of plants to allow light and air to reach emerging leaves. These protective covers are best left in place over root systems for another week or two, however, to minimize the effects of our alternating freeze-thaw cycles, typical of early spring weather.

Spring pruning of damaged and overgrown trees and shrubs continues and a pruning shears and folding saw are always nearby once my cleanup gets underway. Plants that are prone to heavy sap production, including birches, maples or grapes, bleed profusely if pruned in spring as the leaf buds are swelling. Although the running sap will not actually harm the tree or vine, this bleeding can be most disconcerting. Late winter pruning, while the plant is still fully dormant, or spring pruning after new growth begins, will minimize this condition. Crabapple trees tend to be vigorous growers producing numerous vertical shoots from the base of the tree, along the roots, or from the tops of branches. These suckers or water sprouts should be pruned away as close to the base as possible. Members of the cherry family, including peaches, plums and cherries, are particularly susceptible to disease and tend to be best pruned while they are in bloom.

As the leaf and flower buds of many trees and shrubs begin to swell, nature prepares to burst forth with the glorious blooms of spring. Each new day reveals yet another springtime miracle. Soak in the sunshine, delight in the spirited melodies of the singing birds, and watch the magic unfold.

LISTEN To Life

by John Klefeker, BC-HIS
Board Certified-Hearing Instrument Specialist, MA Lic. #127

UNWANTED FEEDBACK

When a hearing instrument emits a high-pitched whistle, it is due to unwanted feedback. Fortunately, there are steps that users can take to deal with the problem. To begin with, wax in the ear canal may prevent sound from traveling into the ear. The sound being forced back out of the ear results in the high-pitched whistle. Ear wax removal, then, may solve this particular problem. Using a hearing instrument at full volume often creates annoying feedback. If so, try turning down the volume or have the hearing instrument checked if you require high volume to hear properly. Finally, because an incorrectly fitted ear mold can cause feedback, try a new or modified ear mold if the problem persists.

Once you have made this significant investment in better hearing, it's important that you are comfortable wearing your hearing instrument and that it fits and is operating at maximum performance. That's not something you'll find via mail order, and that's why at FAMILY HEARING CARE CENTER, we've made the commitment to provide our patients with personal attention from highly trained, board certified hearing instrument specialists and carefully chosen, proven, quality products. We're located at 534 Main Street (Rte. 18), across from the Stetson Bldg. in Weymouth.

P.S. Weight gain or loss may affect the fit of an ear mold to the extent that it may cause feedback.

Huntington hosts Boston premier of 'Breath, Boom'

Playwright Kia Cothron has crafted a riveting look at life in a girl gang in the drama "Breath, Boom," currently being staged in its Boston premiere by the Huntington Theatre Company. "Breath, Boom" follows gang leader Prix through 14 tumultuous years in her young life. The leader of a gang of African-American girls, Prix takes a tough journey from gang life on the streets to prison and back. All the while, she struggles with the harsh realities of a home life marked by both neglect and abuse. Directed with startling realism by Michael John Garces, "Breath, Boom" stars Kellee Stewart, as Prix, leading an excellent 11-member cast.

Recognizing that the play speaks to a younger audience, the Huntington is inviting theatergoers aged 35 and under to "pay your age" at any performance during the run. The Huntington Theatre Company will present "Breath, Boom" at the Boston University Theatre, 264 Huntington Avenue, Boston, through April 6. For tickets and information, call 617/266-0800 or visit www.huntingontheatre.org.

Astral week

By Geri Giannandrea

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 26

The moon continues to travel in ambitious Capricorn today; however, it is inactive until 7:51 p.m. That means that this is a day to finish projects already begun rather than starting new ones. Get your ducks in line so that you are ready to launch ventures tomorrow and Friday. Planetary influences turn around completely at 7:51 p.m., when the moon enters adventurous Aquarius.

THURSDAY, MARCH 27

A flurry of planetary alignments in the next few days makes for an interesting period. You can be most successful, if you plan to initiate new endeavors in your business or personal life. An Aquarius moon today and tomorrow makes this period particularly favorable for meeting people and starting professional or romantic relationships. A harmonious alignment of Mercury-Neptune stimulates intuition and inspires creative thinking. Venus moves into Pisces at 1:14 p.m., remaining there until April 21. Don't be a hermit tonight. An applying alignment of Venus-Uranus promises an exciting evening.

FRIDAY, MARCH 28

Venus and Uranus conjoin at 7:43 a.m., 1-degree Pisces. In addition, the Aquarius moon interacts with Pluto. Be willing to experiment with new ideas, be open to new experiences, take a risk. The moon aligns with Saturn at 3:27 p.m. and becomes inactive. A 90-degree alignment of Mercury and Mars urges you to slow down, keep it light, enjoy the moment. In addition, an applying alignment of the sun and Jupiter sets for the stage for fun and games, late-night partying.

SATURDAY, MARCH 29

The moon enters Pisces at 4:26 a.m., setting a relaxing, easygoing pace this weekend. Don't take on more than you can handle. Postpone launching important enterprises until the new moon occurs Monday. If you are working, zero in on creative projects. Kick back and mellow out completely this evening.

SUNDAY, MARCH 30

Today's planetary patterns are similar to yesterday's. The Pisces moon highlights creativity and artistic sensitivity. Renew your spirit through time spent in meditation, listening to music or enjoying nature. An applying alignment of Mercury to Pluto also affects the day. Its influence can add new depth and dimension to ideas and communications. You can cut through obstacles and free yourself from self-defeating attitudes.

MONDAY, MARCH 31

Gear up for a slow-starting day. Allow extra time to get where you are going. Others may be sleepy, distracted, late for appointments. The Pisces moon aligns with Saturn at 1:59 a.m. and becomes inactive. It travels at the tail end of the zodiac until 3:04 p.m., when it enters Aries. A new moon will culminate tomorrow. This is a day to finish old business, handle routine chores, clean and reorganize.

TUESDAY, APRIL 1

Take advantage of above-average planetary influences during the first half of April; be sure to get important projects off the ground. A Mercury retrograde period will affect the latter part of this month, placing all major purchases, moves, decisions off limits.

An Aries new moon culminates today at 2:19 p.m. The sun and moon come together at 12-degrees of the fire sign Aries. A particularly favorable period for signing contracts and initiating enterprises occurs between 2:19-11:29 p.m. At this time Mercury forms a flowing 60-degree contact to Saturn, aiding mental focus, clarity, precision.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 2

A harmonious alignment of the sun and Neptune helps to take the edge off a fiery Aries moon. It serves as a reminder to slow down and enjoy the moment. On the other hand, this is a great day to get things done and to initiate new activities. Go for the gold. It is best to launch ventures before 2:16 p.m., when the moon interacts with Saturn. However, the green light remains on until 5:05 p.m. At this time the moon aligns with Mercury and becomes inactive.

THURSDAY, APRIL 3

The giant planet Jupiter takes the spotlight today. At 10:03 p.m. Jupiter, standing at 8-degrees Leo, begins to travel in direct motion. It generates feelings of optimism, confidence and can bring luck and opportunities to some. The moon enters Taurus at 3:20 a.m. This day is ideal for beginning new activities, selling or purchasing land, property. Lunar contacts to Jupiter and Venus may spark romantic passions this evening.

FRIDAY, APRIL 4

The Taurus moon aligns with Neptune at 5:13 a.m., making for a slow start to this day. Allow extra time to get where you are going. Planetary influences turn around as the day goes on. If you have a clear plan of action, you can be most productive. Initiate new activities before 7:15 p.m., when the moon aligns with Mars and becomes inactive. Lighten up, relax and unwind this evening.

Residents get their turn on Avalon project

Open Meeting Law complaint is filed

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Residents on Monday night will have a chance to voice concerns and offer suggestions relative to AvalonBay Estates' application for a comprehensive permit to build a 200-unit apartment complex off Route 3A.

The Zoning Board of Appeals will hold the meeting as part of its ongoing public hearing with Avalon. The meeting begins at 7:30 p.m. in the Selectmen's office at Town Hall and will be broadcast on the town's local cable channel.

Avalon has applied for a permit under Chapter 40B, the state's affordable housing law. The law allows developers to request that local bylaws be waived provided they designate a certain percentage of their proposed development as affordable.

Since the Zoning Board began public hearings with Avalon in September, it has heard feedback on the proposal from almost all town boards and committees.

Survey: Keep train on track

Two-thirds in poll want rail

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

If the controversial Greenbush railroad restoration project is on the ropes, you wouldn't know it by the upbeat mood of one its chief proponents – the South Shore Chamber of Commerce.

The chamber, which is armed with a new opinion poll that it commissioned showing two-thirds of the residents along the corridor want the train, is ebullient but not surprised by the results.

The non-profit association, which has 2,300 member businesses on the South Shore, had a similar survey which yielded similar results conducted back in 1995 when, under then Gov. William Weld, Greenbush was on life support.

The new survey results were announced at a press conference at the Chamber headquarters in Quincy on Tuesday morning. The event was attended by representatives from the media and $350K on the ballot

Three-way race for selectman should be a draw

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Voters this Saturday will decide on a $350,000 general override and a three-way race for a seat on the Board of Selectmen. Polls will be open from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. at Town Hall.

Town Clerk Marion Douglas said she expects a turnout of between 35 and 40 percent.

In the battle for a Selectman's seat, challengers Roger Hill and Gabriel Gomez will try to unseat incumbent Michael Sullivan. The candidates voiced their views in a debate last week that was televised on the town's local cable channel. (See related story)

The proposition 2-1/2 override would help fund the town's $28,112,000 operating budget in fiscal year 2004 and is necessary because the town seeks to raise property taxes more than the 2.5 percent allowed by state law.

The override was put on the ballot after being approved in a vote at Town Meeting and now needs a majority vote to pass. If it is approved, the tax rate would increase by $0.21. The average taxpayer, considered the owner of a $575,000 home, would see a $121 hike in taxes.

The override has been the focus of many town officials

Rezoning sets stage for Cohasset Plaza expansion

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

For Cohasset Plaza owner Donald Staszko, the third visit to Town Meeting proved to be a charm.

On Saturday, voters approved an article submitted by Staszko that will expand the Highway Business District behind Cohasset Plaza to make way for future retail space. It was the third time in five years that Staszko has brought the proposal to Town Meeting.

The Highway Business District will now be rezoned to include an area extending back 200 feet behind its previous boundary. The rezoning will apply only along the plot of land occupied by Cohasset Plaza and Stop & Shop. Staszko was able to propose the rezoning because he also owns the land that will be rezoned. The move will allow Staszko to begin seeking permits for plans to add 29,000 square feet of new retail space to the plaza and construct a 19,000-square-foot addition to Stop & Shop.

The location of Cohasset Plaza in the watershed protection district is what has forced Staszko to go to Town Meeting to seek expansion of his retail space.

Under the current bylaws, a use permitted in one zoning district may be extended by up to 200 feet into another district by special permit, but only if both portions of the property were under common ownership before zoning district lines were adopted. That does apply in Staszko's case, but because

Helping win race against polio

Proceeds will go to eradicating disease

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

"How often do we get to pitch in globally to help eradicate a disease that continues to be a problem."
— Coleman Nee, Cohasset Rotary

The thoughts of the hundreds of participants, who will take off for the 27th running of Cohasset's Road Race by the Sea on Sunday, will no doubt be focused on the finish line, not on suffering children a world away.

But thanks to the Cohasset Rotary Club, which sponsors the race, Sunday's runners will be making a contribution to eradicate polio, a sometimes crippling disease that still affects children in the poorest of countries.

Cohasset Rotary will donate a significant amount of this year's proceeds to the fight against polio, according to Coleman Nee, club secretary.

Eradicating the disease is a cause that Rotary International has supported since 1979 when it launched a five-year immunization program in the Philippines. Today Rotary International continues its commitment to rid the world of polio.

Nee explained there is real hope with continued efforts by the World Health Organization and through groups like Rotary that polio can be completely eliminated by 2006.

He said other Rotary clubs in the area are also joining the effort through their own fundraisers.

Organizers expect 800 to 1,200 entrants for the popular road race, which is considered one of the premier events of its kind and a tune-up for the Boston Marathon held April 21. The number of runners depends on the weather, says race director Peter Guild.

"If the weather is lousy, we'll get about 800 – if it's good we could get 1,200," he says.

DEP: Avalon site must be cleaned up

The existing contamination on the site of the proposed 250 unit Avalon Bay Chapter 40B housing project will have to be cleaned up to meet drinking water standards, according to a recent letter from the state Department of Environmental Protection (DEP).

"We are very pleased," said John McNabb, Water Commission Chairman. "We had requested DEP, based on research by our environmental consultants, Norfolk Ram, to take this action to require that this site be cleaned up to drinking water (GW-1) standards, because it is in the watershed for Lily Pond, our drinking water supply. We were concerned that construction of the Avalon project could stir up contaminants that could then drain toward Lily Pond."

"The Avalon site is a state Superfund site that is contaminated with high levels of toxic chemicals," said McNabb, "For example, the soil is contaminated with 28,000 parts per billion (ppb) of Tetrachloroethylene (PCE) and 34,000 ppb of Trichloroethylene (TCE). If the site was cleaned up to GW-2 standards as much as 20,000 ppb would be allowed to remain — but now the levels have to be reduced to 500 ppb or less, which is more protective of public health and safety."

Vote absentee until noontime, April 4

Absentee ballots for the Annual Town Election on April 5, are now available at the Town Clerk's office. Absentee voting may be done during normal office hours until noontime on Friday, April 4, at which time the office will be closed to prepare for the election. 3. Religious beliefs, which prevent voting at the polls on Election Day.

Public hearing on Greenbush project

The New England District, U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, will hold a public hearing in Hingham on Tuesday, April 15 at the Hingham Town Hall Auditorium, 210 Central St.. The first session will be held from 1-4 p.m. with registration beginning at noon; the second session will begin at 7 p.m. with registration at 6 p.m.

All interested federal, state and local agencies, interested private and public organizations and individuals are invited to attend this public hearing.

This public hearing is in response to an application from the MBTA for a Corps permit to place fill material within a total of 7.81 acres of wetlands and waterways for the construction of the Greenbush Old Colony Railroad commuter line through the towns of Braintree, Weymouth, Hingham, Cohasset and Scituate.

The two public hearings will be held on Tuesday, April 15 in the main auditorium of the Hingham Town Hall in both the afternoon and evening. Persons wishing to provide oral comments are reminded they need to register at the site prior to the start of the hearing.

The MBTA staff will provide a brief presentation of the current project at the beginning of each session.

The Army Corps of Engineers released a public notice describing the project on Dec. 12 last year. Copies of the public notice are available from Ted Lento of the Regulatory Branch or by calling 1-800-362-4367. Copies of the public notice will be available at the public hearing.

By conducting this public hearing, the Corps of Engineers seeks to fulfill its regulatory requirements to solicit public comments and input about the proposals. They will be considered in evaluating whether the application should be issued or denied. In addition, extensive meetings pursuant to Section 106 of the National Historic Preservation Act with consulting parties have been held to review the project impacts on historical resources affected by the project.

A prior public hearing was held in August 1997 and the Corps is seeking comments on project design changes that have occurred since that time, including changes to locations of the Nantasket Junction Station, the Weymouth Landing Station, and the layover station in Scituate as well as the relocations of Town Brook in Hingham.

Oral and written comments will be accepted at the hearing. Additional written comments will be accepted by the Corps of Engineers until April 25 this year. Send comments to Ted Lento at the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, New England District, Regulatory Division, 696 Virginia Road, Concord 01742-2751.

Town sued over Wolf Pits

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

The town is being sued over land it took two years ago by eminent domain.

Leland and Leonora Jenkins, the trustees of Wolf Woods Trust, have filed suit in Superior Court alleging that the town did not pay fair market value for a plot of land known as the Wolf Pits.

The town took the 6.75-acre plot of land in May of 2001 after Town Meeting authorized the Water Commission to pay the owners $150,000 for the property.

The town took the land because of fears it could threaten Cohasset's supply of drinking water if developed. The land lies adjacent to the Aaron River Reservoir.

The Jenkinses were co-owners of the property with Wayne Sawchuk of Beechwood Street at the time it was taken. The three bought the property in December of 2001 from the Bates/Pratt Trust for $150,000.

Sawchuk had plans to construct 27 units of senior housing or an 11-lot single-family subdivision on the property. A preliminary plan for the subdivision was denied by the Planning Board shortly before the town took the land. The Board of Health also denied a plan for a shared septic system on the site.

Leland Jenkins and Sawchuk proposed a land swap as alternative to the town taking the land by eminent domain. They wanted the town to take the Wolf Pits property and in return give them a comparable developable piece of town-owned land. Sawchuk said at the time that a land swap would have been a "fairer" solution.

The Jenkinses and Sawchuk had three years from the time the Wolf Pits property was taken to appeal the town's decision.

Sawchuk is not listed as a plaintiff in the current lawsuit and declined to comment.

Leonora Jenkins also declined to comment on the suit. Her husband, Leland, said the town never negotiated over the price of the land. He could not say how much the land had been appraised for and referred the Mariner to his lawyer, who did not immediately return a phone call.

The lawsuit comes just as Water Commissioner John McNabb announced at Town Meeting on Saturday that the Water Commission settled out of court for $225,000 for a strip of land it took by eminent domain on Scituate Hill. That land was used to connect a pipe to the town's water tower.

It appears as though the Jenkinses will argue that the Wolf Pits property was developable and should have been worth more money as a result.

In the legal complaint filed by Wolf Woods Trust, the town is asked to provide information about the opinions of appraisers who surveyed the land for the town before it was taken. The notice asks for the appraisers' opinions as to the "highest and best use" of the property.

Sawchuk said two years ago the land was fully developable, relying by 10 successful percolation tests for septic systems on the site.

It would be more than a year before the case went to trial if it is not settled out of court.

The name "Wolf Pits" came from a time when the wild animals roamed Cohasset, and were a major public safety threat. In several locations around town, pits were dug and covered over. A carcass would be either strung up over the pit or in the pit, causing the wolf to fall into it.

TOWN MEETING

Preservation funds for Hagerty house, trails

Town Meeting voters approved $36,000 under the Community Preservation Act for a $100,000 project to renovate a building on the Hagerty Property. The building will be used by both the Center for Student Coastal Research and the South Shore Arts Center. It will include two public bathrooms that will be accessible form Mariner's Park.

Voters also approved $25,000 under the CPA for a feasibility study of a bike and pedestrian trail along the town's stretch of the Greenbush rail.

Schools to get new bus

Voters approved an article to purchase a $60,000 new school bus. The bus will join the school department's fleet of five buses, allowing an older bus to be sold, used and reserved for parking use. A citizen's motion to pay for the bus by using revenue from the school run daycare program and money meant to subsidize the school lunch program was defeated.

Smoking is history

Voters approved a new version of the town's smoking bylaw, making tobacco an illegal in all public places and workplaces. The ban also applies to restaurant patio areas and within 20 feet of any entrance of a workplace. Three Cohasset restaurants — Koko Island, Atlantica and the Red Lion Inn — will be allowed to keep their smoking variances until they expire in 2005. The town will no longer issue variances.

A citizen's motion to include in the smoking bylaw a clause that made buying or smoking cigarettes illegal for children under 18 was defeated. Currently under state law, it is illegal to provide or sell cigarettes to a minor, but it is not illegal for a minor to buy or smoke them.

GABRIEL GOMEZ
For Selectman
A Vote for Responsible Leadership

Cohasset needs Responsible Leadership to take on the challenges that face the Town and prevent future failures...

Responsible Leadership will fight the exploitation of 40B
We should use 40B to provide affordable housing for our senior citizens. For three decades we have failed until developers start to use loopholes to corrupt the intent of 40B. We must rid ourselves of this exploitation and build real affordable housing for our elderly.

Responsible Leadership will protect our schools
Our schools are our most precious resource and we must not subject them to the misfortunes of the budget and override process. Long-term planning can avoid the ups and downs of year-to-year reactionary policy.

Responsible Leadership will plan for the future and avoid overrides
Proper fiscal planning is needed to avoid the chaos that surrounds the balancing of the budget every year. We must control the controllable and prevent the preventable.

Responsible Leadership will take responsibility for elderly housing
Instead of manipulating the Historical Society, we should be planning a long-term solution for those in our Town that are enjoying their waning years.

Responsible Leadership will attract business to Cohasset
Our 93/7 residential/commercial tax base puts undue burden on homeowners to support the services of Cohasset. We must proactively approach Cohasset-friendly businesses and encourage them to move.

Responsible Leadership will advocate to state leaders for Cohasset
On issues such as the runway, 40B, local aid cuts and un-funded state-mandated programs, we must let Cohasset's voice be heard to state leaders. With a strong position from the Board and the will to negotiate, state leaders can be influenced to enact more Cohasset-friendly policies.

Responsible Leadership will support the volunteer services
Volunteerism is one answer to our community safety and services. Volunteer services like the firefighters have been allowed to languish for lack of attention.

Responsible Leadership will make our sewer system fair
The sewer system has deteriorated into a political football. Cohasset needs a sensible plan that serves the needs of the community safely and without distorting either growth or funding.

Apts. amnesty, Pilgrim storage, ledge and more don't make the grade

Six articles postponed in all

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Annual Town Meeting did not accomplish all that some town officials had hoped for.

On Saturday, a proposed bylaw that would have given amnesty to illegal apartments became the sixth and final article to be withdrawn from the warrant since it went to print on March 7.

The so-called "amnesty bylaw" faced opposition from the Planning Board, which said its language was in some cases too restrictive and in other cases not restrictive enough. The bylaw would have granted comprehensive permits to existing apartments provided they were brought up to code and made affordable by state standards.

The Planning Board had wavered on the amnesty bylaw since first reviewing it in a public hearing in early March. The board voted 2 to 1 to recommend the article, then reversed its vote after Selectman Ronnie McMorris suggested the bylaw did not fully protect the single family character of Cohasset.

Selectman Tom Callahan, who drafted the article with the Growth and Development Committee, added segments from the town's accessory dwelling bylaw to address the issues brought up by McMorris. Selectmen and the Advisory Committee then unanimously recommended the article last week.

But in the moments before Town Meeting began, the Planning Board decided it would not recommend the article in its current form. The Growth and Development Committee then voted to postpone the article indefinitely. Callahan said the committee hopes to bring the bylaw forward again at fall Town Meeting.

The amnesty bylaw was one of a series of proposed bylaws that were removed from the warrant this year. The so-called "ledge bylaw," which would require a special permit for removal of ledge eight feet or more in height, was removed two weeks ago by the Planning Board.

Also removed in the days before the warrant went to print were a bylaw that would require a site plan review for new houses more than 3,000 square feet and a bylaw that would require building permit applications circulated to the Planning Board, the Conservation Commission and the Board of Health.

Different town officials have vowed to bring each of these withdrawn articles back to Town Meeting in the fall.

The amnesty bylaw was not the only article that did not survive the home stretch to Town Meeting. Last Thursday, a citizens' petition filed by John McNabb to demand dry cask storage of spent fuel rods at Pilgrim Power Station was also withdrawn.

The withdrawal came two days after Selectmen, who initially supported the article unanimously, wondered whether they had expressed an opinion too quickly after only hearing one side of the issue.

After seeing that the opinions of Selectmen were wavering and that the Advisory Committee was split 4 to 4 on the issue, McNabb, who is also Chairman of the Water Commission, decided to withdraw the article.

"I was so busy dealing with Water Commission articles that were higher priority that I didn't have time to put together more educational materials to debate the issue," said McNabb. "Maybe we'll bring it back in the fall. We'll see."

Two articles from the Sewer Commission were also withdrawn from the warrant in the weeks before Town Meeting. One article was a request to borrow $300,000 for additional membrane cartridges to increase hydraulic capacity at the Sewer Treatment Plant. The second article requested funds to pay for the design and permitting of the Little Harbor and Atlantic Avenue Sewer Districts.

Sewer Commissioner Gary Vanderweil told voters at Town Meeting that the first article was withdrawn in favor of alternate solutions — seeking out "sources of inflow" in the sewer system and rearranging the filtering cycles at the Sewer Treatment Plant. "Hopefully this two-fold approach will enable us never to come back and ask for this money again," he said.

Vanderweil said the Sewer Commission abandoned plans to start designing the sewer expansion "after seeing the extent of the override necessary for the town." He said expansion was not set to begin until 2007, so delaying design and permitting for another year would have no affect on the construction schedule.

Avalon hearing is Monday

tal concerns of the town," said Zoning Board Chairman Woody Chittick. "If it can, we approve it. If it can't, we won't approve it."

Chittick said he hopes to hear constructive criticism from the audience on Monday. "I hope people will have some good suggestions," he said. "I'd like to see people not only put on the table a concern but also put on the table a solution."

The biggest concern so far has been that Avalon's wastewater plan may threaten the town's supply of drinking water. At the last Zoning Board hearing, the Water Commission and the Planning Board argued that the proposed development would release its wastewater into the Lily Pond watershed. Meanwhile, John McNabb, Chairman of the Water Commission, has filed a complaint with the Norfolk County District Attorney's office claiming that the Zoning Board has violated the state's open meeting law by convening a negotiating team with representatives from the town and AvalonBay Estates.

The negotiating team met for the first and only time on Monday, March 24, before the Zoning Board's last hearing on Avalon. The team was made up of ZBA Chairman Woody Chittick, Town Manager Mark Haddad, Selectmen Chairman Michael Sullivan, Avalon vice president of development Scott Dale, Avalon counsel Steve Schwartz and a few other Avalon representatives.

Chittick said the team was set up in accordance with state guidelines relating to Chapter 40B and he did not think the open meeting law had been broken. "It's not a decision making body," he said. "It doesn't even make recommendations per se."

Chittick said the purpose of the group was to identify issues big and small that were brought up over the course of the public hearing. "It's just a more efficient way to isolate the issues that need careful consideration," he said.

But McNabb said in a statement that it was "crystal clear" the open meeting law had been breached. He said the "secret negotiating process" reinforced many peoples' belief that the ZBA and the Selectmen are in favor of Avalon.

Chittick denied that the ZBA had made any premature decisions about Avalon's proposal. He said that many people expect the board to "damn the project from the start."

"State law doesn't allow us to do that, as much as people would like to believe otherwise," he said.

Chittick said the negotiating team decided it would hold off on discussing smaller issues until some of the bigger issues surrounding Avalon's proposal were resolved. Those issues include Avalon's wastewater system, its water supply and water pressure plan and its access road plan.

Chittick said the ZBA is currently waiting for additional information from Avalon on those topics. After that information is received, he said, the ZBA would hold at least one more meeting. Once the public hearing is closed, the board would have 40 days to issue a decision on the comprehensive permit.

According to Dale, Avalon disputes the Water Commission's claim that wastewater on the proposed site would flow into the Lily Pond watershed. It bases that opinion on an on-site study done more than a year ago.

Still, said Dale, the company is investigating alternative solutions.

"We'd prefer not to have to debate that issue to a conclusion," he said. "We'd like to reach an alternative solution."

Dale declined to say what those alternatives might be. He said Avalon was looking into installing a water pump to increase water pressure and lowering the grade of the access road from 8 to 6 degrees.

Cohasset Plaza to expand

Cohasset Plaza lies in the watershed protection district, it's ineligible for a special permit.

Stasko's only viable solution has been to go to Town Meeting to ask for rezoning. On his second try, in 2001, his proposal failed to gain two-thirds approval by only four votes.

Last year, Staszko drafted an article that would have allowed him to apply for a special permit despite his location, but he withdrew it after the Planning Board showed strong opposition.

This year, Staszko reverted to his previous strategy to rezone the land entirely. The article was recommended by all five Selectmen and seven of eight members on the Advisory Committee, who said the town would benefit from the estimated $1.3 million in tax revenue that the expansion would bring in over the next 10 years.

As in the past, the article faced stiff opposition from the Planning Board, which voted unanimously to not recommend it.

Speaking before Town Meeting, Planning Board member Peter Pratt called the article "special interest legislation" that attempted to bypass the town's zoning bylaws. He said the new retail development could lead to "massive traffic and parking issues" if the 200-unit AvalonBay development is also approved.

"This is essentially a form of spot zoning," said Pratt.

Planning Board member Bob Sturdy echoed Pratt's statements and indicated that future negotiations with Staszko, who will ultimately need to go before the Planning Board for a site plan review, could be difficult. "The Planning Board will be under tremendous pressure to just lay down and play dead or else face a lawsuit," Sturdy said. "And frankly I don't like to be in that position."

Speaking for the Board of Selectmen, Selectman Merle Brown lauded the plan. "This is a great opportunity for the town to get more extra money to help us on our taxes without affecting our schools, without affecting our fire department or our police department," he said.

Brown dismissed the Planning Board's assertion that the added retail space would hurt downtown businesses. "They didn't worry about the downtown — and I'm glad they didn't — when they welcomed Hingham Lumber Company into town," Brown said. "And that hardware store is five times the size of the hardware store downtown."

Water Commissioner Glenn Pratt, who also supported Staszko's article, said he was upset by Sturdy's statement that he was "not particularly happy" about seeing the article reappear on the warrant.

"I'm particularly disturbed by hearing an elected official make a comment like they're tired of this article coming here time and time again," Pratt said. "I'm here to tell you, that is one of the freedoms of America. It's allowed to be brought back here each year."

The article, which needed two-thirds approval, was ultimately passed in a voice vote. No hand count was necessary. It was the final article heard on the floor of Town Meeting.

After the meeting had adjourned, Staszko said he was "very thankful" to the voters that the article had passed. He said he would approach the Planning Board with preliminary plans for plaza expansion in the beginning of June.

A flyer distributed by Staszko at Town Meeting showed two possible options for expanding the plaza. In one scenario, the future retail space is connected to the new expanded area of Stop & Shop. In another, it is located on its own, between Stop & Shop and Cohasset Plaza. No retailer has been selected for that space.

Osgood roof repairs pass in a close vote

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Opposition to the article was unexpected, but after two voice votes, Town Moderator George Marlette was forced to call for a hand count.

With a $350,000 operational override, an $800,000 project to improve the town's police and fire station, and more than $350,000 of Community Preservation funding on the warrant, no one could have predicted that the only vote at Saturday's Town Meeting to go to a hand count would involve a $25,000 patch job to the roof of the old Osgood School.

Then again, Town Meetings aren't known for their predictability.

The roof repairs are needed in the 1929 wing of the former Osgood School, soon to be occupied by the Our World Children's Discovery Museum. Opposition to the article was unexpected, but after two voice votes, Town Moderator George Marlette was forced to call for a hand count. The project was approved by a 82 to 32 vote.

The decision came after Leland Jenkins of Jerusalem Road challenged the proposal, saying the town had already spent $1 million to repair and remodel the rest of the building so it could house the new Paul Pratt Memorial Library.

"The town is leasing the building (to One World) for a total of $1," said Jenkins. "This lease should be renegotiated so the town is not held responsible for any future damage to the exterior of this building."

Many voters seemed to agree with Jenkins but not enough to shoot down the article, which needed two-thirds of the vote for approval.

Town Manager Mark Haddad said the town was obligated to fix the leaky roof because it owns the building and is responsible for the upkeep and maintenance of its exterior.

One World is allowed to rent from the town for only $1 because the organization will use the space for recreational purposes.

Money for the roof repairs will be appropriated from existing funds and will not affect the tax rate.

Proposed Pratt apartments cause a stir at Town Meeting

Debate is over their affordability

By John Camera
JCAMERA@CNC.COM

Officials at Town Meeting on Saturday butted heads over a proposal to build two senior apartments in the basement of the old Paul Pratt Memorial Library, soon to be the new home of the Historical Society.

The $193,000 project, which was overwhelmingly approved by voters, will be funded by the Community Preservation Act (CPA). An additional $107,000 appropriated through the CPA will pay for other structural improvements to the building, which turned 100 this year.

Rent from the two one-bedroom, senior apartments will fund the Historical Society's estimated $27,000 operating cost and help pay for future maintenance to the building. But while members of the Historical Society may be smiling, some Selectmen are not. A last minute deal between the two groups produced a compromise that only two of the five Selectmen supported.

What the Selectmen wanted was a guarantee that the apartments would be permanently deeded as "affordable" by state standards. That way, the units would count towards the town's affordable housing stock under Chapter 40B, the state's affordable housing law.

Under 40B, developers can apply for a comprehensive permit unless 10 percent of the town's housing is affordable, or unless the town's percentage of affordable housing is increasing by 0.75 percent (or 21 units) per year.

But the Historical Society's original plan, as approved by the Community Preservation Committee, was to make the apartments for moderate income tenants, not low income tenants.

Last week, after assuming that making the units affordable would mean lowering their rent, the Historical Society turned down the Selectmen's suggestion, saying the adjustment would create a budget shortfall. Low income rent would provide only $25,800 per year, the society said, while moderate income rent would bring in an additional $3,000.

But on Saturday at Town Meeting, CPC Chairman Stuart Ivimey informed the society that because the apartments are funded by the CPA, a state regulation would allow the units to count as affordable as long as low-income tenants lived there.

"Because they were coming to the town asking for $300,000, we felt that preferably two, but at least one, of those units should have been affordable to help us with 40B."

— Selectman Fred Koed

It seemed, for a moment, like a solution that pleased everyone. The apartments could remain at the moderate-income rent level — about $1,200 a month — and the Historical Society would still be able to fund its operating budget.

But what upset some Selectmen was that the Historical Society refused to agree to rent only to low-income tenants. Instead, the society said it would give preference low-income tenants, but if none could be found, or if none could afford to pay moderate income rent, it would rent to moderate income tenants. In that case, the town would not get credit for the units under Chapter 40B.

Selectmen Fred Koed, Ronnie McMorris and Tom Callahan felt the Historical Society did not go far enough to ensure that the units would be credited to the town's affordable housing stock.

"Because they were coming to the town asking for $300,000, we felt that preferably two, but at least one, of those units should have been affordable to help us with 40B," Koed said in an interview after Town Meeting. "A new component of local aid is going to be based on affordable housing starts. So communities that aren't doing something in affordable housing are going to be at a disadvantage when the new local aid comes out."

Selectman Tom Callahan, who is also a member of the CPC, said the situation presented "an opportunity to kill two birds with one stone." He argued that CPA funds should be used to produce affordable units whenever possible, even though the CPA statute allows for funding of moderate income units as well.

"We need to get 40B bang for our buck," he said.

Callahan's view is in sharp contrast to CPC Chairman Stuart Ivimey, who argued before Town Meeting that "the CPA is not a tool by which to fight 40B."

Despite philosophical differences among town officials over how to direct CPA funding, the Historical Society is finalizing designs and preparing to put its project out to bid as soon as possible. Society co-president Paula Kozol said she hoped construction would be completed "within the better part of a year."

Kozol said the tenant selection process would begin when construction was winding down. She said there was no set time on how long the society would look for low-income tenants before turning to moderate income tenants. "I don't see a time on that," she said. "I think we'll make our best effort. That's what it says in the agreement."

Kozol said low-income tenants would be given the highest preference in the selection process. Residents of Cohasset would be given preference only if they qualified as low income tenants or if no low income tenants were available.

OPINION

EDITORIAL

Support the override

Time and time again over the years, Cohasset taxpayers have gone to the polls to support Prop. 2-1/2 overrides to maintain services.

So while Prop. 2-1/2 overrides get a bad rap in many towns because they equate to an increase in property taxes, Cohasset voters seem to understand overrides can be a necessary thing.

The two-step process of two-thirds approval at Town Meeting and then by a simple majority at the polls insures that all of us get a chance to participate in this democratic process.

Your town officials, including the Town Manager and Finance Director, Selectmen, Advisory and School Committee have worked hard to whittle the override amount down to $350,000, a figure they hope will be palatable to the voters on Saturday.

It's no secret the state is facing the worst financial crisis in recent memory. Faced with cuts in local aid from the state, towns are being asked to be more self-sufficient than ever. The state surplus has disappeared and has been replaced with a $3 billion deficit in what seems to be a blink of an eye.

Cohasset is on solid footing, however, as reflected in its high bond rating – a sign that outside financial analysts think the town is well run. It is also less dependant on local aid than many other communities, so it is in a better position to weather the fiscal storm.

But with a tax base that is 93 percent residential – the town has few options but to ask its homeowners to ante up when needed. This is one of those times.

We can assure you that no one at Town Hall or the School Department is "tax happy." All have worked together in a remarkable show of cooperation this budget season to present a conservative budget with as low an override as possible.

While $350,000 may not seem like a ton of money [it is far less than the average single-family home in town which is valued at $585,000] – it can add up to many jobs and programs.

The override will add 21 cents to the tax rate, which will cost the owner of the average valued home about $121 more in fiscal year 2004, which starts July 1.

In these recessionary times, we don't make light of the fact that many in Cohasset are struggling to make ends meet and can't afford a tax hike. We think our town officials – most of whom live in town and pay taxes themselves — are also sensitive to that fact and haven't put the override before you without a great deal of forethought.

So Saturday, we ask you to again dig deeper into your pockets to support your town services and schools. Cohasset is a beautiful, and yes, an expensive place to live. We hope you continue to believe it is worth the investment.

Covering the base

Townhouses and apartment buildings. Industrial space and offices. Retail stores. A skating rink. Recreational facilities. Civic buildings for public use.

These are just some of the options being explored for the dormant naval air station in South Weymouth. In the next year plans for reusing the air base will take shape and form what will be the blueprint for the largest undeveloped parcel of land on the South Shore.

The new company contracted to develop the site along with the South Shore Tri-Town Development Corporation — the agency charged with overseeing the reuse — has years of experience revitalizing vacant military facilities. In fact, Lennar Associates has been involved with redeveloping four naval air stations and two Air Force bases, mostly in California with two near the San Francisco Bay area. That experience should prove vital to the evolution and success of the South Weymouth site.

But the company cannot do it alone. It's clear the potential success or, frankly, failure rests also in the hands of those who live on the South Shore. Too many people think this is a Weymouth issue, or a concern for Abington and Rockland — the three towns that border the base. Yet that seems to be a rather parochial view. This project is an enormous undertaking that will impact the entire South Shore in one way or another — whether it's providing housing, jobs or needed recreational facilities.

A skating rink, for example, would be a huge benefit for the entire South Shore given the lack of ice time available to local figure skaters and high school and youth hockey teams.

And, of course, there is the potential for added traffic on our roadways as well as other detrimental impacts if the project is not planned well or fails to take into consideration important needs of the South Shore.

Lennar, a publicly traded company with $3 billion in assets with offices in California, London, Dallas and now South Weymouth, is actively seeking input from area communities. Officials are quick to point out that they know this project extends beyond the town borders of Weymouth, Abington and Rockland. They want a project that is financially viable, but also a success for the area. That's one reason they have significantly scaled back original plans for a large amount of office space.

"In this economy, that's just not a good fit anymore. There is so much office space vacant now," explained David S. Hall, a vice president with Lennar and a commercial developer on the South Shore. Hall, who grew up in Marshfield and now lives in Milton, heads the project and is making it his "sole focus."

Hall and others are trying to reach out to as many people as possible to gain insight and input on the best use of the land. Officials have been on the road meeting and getting feedback on the potential project, with the next session set for next Wednesday, April 9, at the base conference center (the former bowling alley). It will include architects presenting their visions, as well as officials soliciting input from the public.

We can relate to the frustration many have felt about the slow progress to develop the land. Since 1997, when the Navy vacated the premises, there have been many ups and downs at the site. Promises have been made and promises have been broken. The Mills Corporation of Virginia came in several years ago full of ideas and hope to develop the land only to see the company walk away.

But things appear different now. There seems to be a new energy and vision for the approximate 1,500 acres of land. Lennar not only has experience developing these bases, it has worked with military leaders to turn empty bases into viable and vibrant communities. Lennar knows how to work the system and get things moving.

That's why it is critical residents from Braintree down to Kingston get on board with what's happening and voice their views. It's an opportunity we can't afford to squander and it's one we need to take advantage of now while the project is still in the planning stages.

In the next year or so, we at Community Newspaper Company will be devoting resources and time to explore the many facets of this project. We envision an ongoing series of stories investigating the proposed uses of the site as well as community reaction and concerns and getting behind the scenes of other Lennar projects.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Support the override

TO THE EDITOR:

As you know, last Saturday, the Town Meeting voted "I" to support the proposed Fiscal 2004 town budget. This was the first step in a two part process. The second, most important, step is to get out and vote this Saturday, April 5, at the Town Hall. Our vote is needed to balance the budget which was passed at Town Meeting.

The $350,000 override figure doesn't provide for any "extras." It comes with cuts sustained in every department, including the schools. But, by passing it, we will be able to maintain our current level of DPW services and maintain our current level of academic programs. We will also be able to provide the essential Health and Human Services, cut by the State, which includes funding for the outreach worker and the van driver; these are important services for our Senior residents.

As I know all to well, everyone's vote matters! I urge all to support this override — so get out and vote!

History book is a best seller

TO THE EDITOR:

Thank you Cohasset! So far, over 2200 volumes of Narrative History of Cohasset, 1950-2000 by Jacqueline Dormitzer have been sold. The response has been way beyond our most optimistic expectations.

Separately, because Volumes I and II of the town history were no longer available, our committee reissued those editions with new colorful period dust jackets. Although most of the three-volume boxed sets were sold during the holiday season, the individual books are now available at Buttonwood Books in Cohasset and in the town clerk's office at town hall.

All of us associated with the six-year long project are most grateful to our fellow citizens for their ongoing support. We believe we are probably the only community on the planet with an up-to-date history from the ice age to the present.

And there is more really good stuff coming from this committee. Stay tuned!

Deer Hill principal

TO THE EDITOR:

For some time now, Paul Callahan, the principal at Deer Hill, has known that he will not be coming back to Cohasset next fall. Superintendent Malvey has decided not to renew his contract. For those of us who know Paul Callahan and who have witnessed first hand his devotion to the children of Cohasset, this news comes as a great shock.

Paul understands that a good leader must lead by his example. For the past seven years, he has given many hours over and above what was expected of him. So when the Deer Hill teachers volunteered their summer days or Christmas vacation days to move tables and chairs and books from one wing to another, Paul was always right beside them. Every day, he is usually the first to arrive and the last to leave. He attended every school event, not because he had to but because he wanted to. Under his direction, MCAS was successfully ushered into the curriculum and Deer Hill students continue to achieve admirably on this test. In addition, he reinstituted the experience of Camp Bournedale where children learn things not tested on MCAS. These include self-worth, team spirit and creativity, to name a few. During the past year, Mr. Callahan has worked diligently to maintain a safe and stable learning environment for his teachers and students during the construction of the new wing. He supports his teachers even when it may not be popular to do so. He does this because he was an elementary public school teacher himself for 25 years and respects the work that teachers do.

Superintendent Malvey is completely within his rights to hire or dismiss any administrator without the consent or approval of the local School Committee and without explanation. So be it. This decision may adhere to the letter of the law but it does not reflect its intent which is meant to reform schools. Do you really think that we need to reform Deer Hill School?

As a parent of a child who attended Cohasset schools grades K-12 and an educator for 30 years, I am aware of the problems that plague American schools in general and Cohasset schools, in particular. Paul Callahan is not a problem. In my opinion, he is cut from the same cloth as Clark Chatterton, Ken Ekberg, Jack DeLorenzo — educators respected in our town for their dedication and commitment to the school children of Cohasset. It will be a shame to lose him, but our loss will definitely be some other town's gain. How lucky for them. How sad for us.

Historical Society appreciates support

TO THE EDITOR:

On behalf of the Board and the members of the Cohasset Historical Society, we wish to thank the citizens of Cohasset for voting in favor of the Community Preservation Committee's funding for the adaptive reuse of the old Paul Pratt Memorial Library building and the construction of two rental apartments on the lower level. We are now the proud owners of the Paul Pratt Memorial building and are grateful for the support and encouragement you have given us during the last five months.

We also want to acknowledge the generosity of John Barry of Marshfield; Louis Harvey and the guarantors; the CPC and their chairman, Stuart Ivimey; Richard Henderson, our counsel; Frank Campbell and Kevin Burns of the Pilgrim Co-Operative Bank; the Cohasset Mariner; and the Trustees of the Paul Pratt Memorial Library. Saving the "old library" for the Historical Society reflects the overwhelming desire of the people of Cohasset to continue to enjoy this wonderful building.

One regret is that we must reschedule the April 5 Open House and Sign Exhibit. We will keep you posted via our newsletter and the Cohasset Mariner.

WHAT HAVE VOTERS TOLD YOU IS THEIR BIGGEST CONCERN: The balance between increasing taxes and maintaining the level of services people desire; affordable housing and senior housing; character of the community.
REASON FOR SEEKING OFFICE: I am motivated to seek the selectman's seat to participate in maintaining the quality of life in Cohasset. Over the years I have proven to be an effective leader with the ability to work well with others to move issues forward in the interest of the Community. I am committed to strong fiscal management, an excellent educational system and the protection of the beauty of Cohasset.

Over the last seven years we have rebuilt a large percentage of the infrastructure of Cohasset. Along with many others I have been very involved in developing these different projects and bringing them to the community to gather support. I have also participated in the process to insure these projects were completed on time, within budget and with as little negative impact to the Town. This leadership experience will be valuable to the Town dealing with this fiscal challenges that are facing us.

During the next several years the major issues in the Town will be finances, the train, downtown revitalization, affordable housing, and senior housing. I have been very involved in each of these issues over the last few years and am interested in utilizing my knowledge to help insure that we enhance the Community while protecting its character.I look forward to continuing to work with the Community and would appreciate your support on Saturday.

Gabriel E. Gomez

NAME: Gabriel E. Gomez
AGE: 37
ADDRESS: 53 Highland Avenue
FAMILY: Wife: Sarah; Children: Olivia (4), Zander (2), Antonia (5 months)
YEARS IN TOWN: 2
EDUCATION: MBA, Harvard Business School; BS, Systems Engineering, United States Naval Academy, with merit

CIVIC/MUNICIPAL EXPERIENCE: U.S. Navy Pilot, 1987-1991; U.S. Navy SEAL commander, 1991-1996; Director, Greater Boston YMCA, current; Member, American Legion, current
WHAT VOTERS HAVE TOLD YOU IS THEIR BIGGEST CONCERN: Transparency of budgeting process
REASON FOR SEEKING OFFICE: I am running to offer the voters a fresh voice of responsible leadership. I am running because I have solutions to offer.

Cohasset's voters have told me that in these difficult times continuity is insufficient to provide confidence in a candidate's ability to overcome the new hurdles — and that they are concerned with more than just how long a candidate has lived in town. I can offer strategic leadership, proactive policy and prudent management to ensure the long-term health of Cohasset. I will seek creative budget solutions to avoid tax hikes and focus on protecting our schools. I have the experience to walk into any CEO's office and propose that they move their business to Cohasset. I will be a formidable advocate for Cohasset's needs to state leaders.

I have not only the passion to serve Cohasset but also the background to be effective, with a foundation in leadership and consensus building as a Navy SEAL commander and a Navy pilot as well as problem solving at Harvard Business School. Further, I come to this election with day-to-day experience counseling growing companies and the Greater Boston YMCA as they face many of the same challenges as the town of Cohasset.

Roger Q. Hill

NAME: Roger Q. Hill
Age: 43
ADDRESS: 19A Highland Ave. Cohasset
FAMILY: Wife: Joanne C. Hill; son: Quentin
YEARS IN TOWN: 43 year resident
EDUCATION: Grades 1 to 8 Cohasset schools Grades 9 to 12 Chapel Hill, Waltham College Wentworth Institute of Technology Boston
OCCUPATION: Hill Realty Trust, property management (president)
Woodworks Construction (owner)
King Street Boat storage (owner)
CIVIC/MUNICIPAL EXPERIENCE: South Shore Art Center (volunteer of the year 2000)
Friends of Cohasset Harbor
Cohasset Action
All selectman meetings in the last 1.5 years
Avalon Z.B.A. meetings
Cohasset Yacht Club House committee
Senior shuttle driver four years
WHAT HAVE VOTERS TOLD YOU IS THEIR BIGGEST CONCERN? That Cohasset is not heading in the direction that they had hoped. Most of the older folks in the town can afford to stay here, and the children don't want the house because it's too expensive to live here. Some of these families have owned the home for many generations. The taxes are just too much to bear for most residents. Having someone in the selectman's office that will keep the residents and the character of the town in check is important.
REASON FOR SEEKING OFFICE: For many years, 43 to be exact, I sat back and watched the town develop and grow. The past two years have really scared me, that's why I'm running for Selectman. Some of the changes I see being proposed in my opinion, are not good ones. The over building, proposed harbor changes, AvalonBay, and big houses being built where small ones use to be. The character of the town is getting lost by development. The interest's, natural beauty and charm of Cohasset need to be protected, and I feel I'm up to the job. We need leadership that can be trusted and counted on.

I have known most of you for a very long time and you know how I feel about Cohasset, very proud. Proud to be a resident and business owner here. I will be proud to serve as your selectman. I will do my best to keep Cohasset affordable and try to keep down the spending. With your input and help this can be accomplished

See you April 5, Roger

Get ready for the war books

HENSHAW

TOM HENSHAW

The war in Iraq will be over soon, although maybe not seem soon enough for a generation that has been brought up on microwaved TV dinners and 30-second news bites that pass for in-depth reports.

In a way, I hate to see it — the end of the war, I mean, because that means we will be deluged with war books — good books, bad books, little books, big books, books that are soon to be major motion pictures, most of them starring Tom Cruise.

Already "Bush at War," by Bob Woodward (Simon & Schuster, $28) is 119th on the USA Today list of best-seller; and "Dreaming War," by Gore Vidal (Thunder's Mouth Press, $11.95), subtitled "Blood for Oil and the Cheney-Bush Junta," is 146th.

"The Threatening Storm," by Kenneth M. Pollock (Random House, $25.95), the story of confronting Saddam, is 173rd, and "The War Over Iraq: Saddam's Tyranny and America's Mission," by Lawrence F. Kaplan & William Kristol (Encounter, $25.95), is 178th.

Do you suppose "What Went Wrong?" by Bernard Lewis, is jumping the gun?

Pity poor Sherron Watkins, the former Enron executive who blew the whistle on her boss and told all about it in "Power Failure: The Inside Story of the Collapse of Enron," which was the hot story of the year in . . . geez, was it only a couple of years ago?

...books that are soon to be major motion pictures, most of them starring Tom Cruise.

She was all lined up for promotional appearances on the major television networks, including Larry King Live on CNN, only to be preempted by a retired general who explained why Baghdad would fall in three days, four at the most.

And to top it off, Doubleday cancelled Sharron's advertising budget, probably anticipating the high cost of flogging the sale of war books in the near future. And not necessarily books about the war in Iraq either.

Since August, 2001, literary agent Amy Williams had been trying to hustle Anthony Swofford's memoir of the Gulf War — "One of the most powerful pieces of writing I'd ever seen," she said — but publishers would have none of it.

Then came 9/11 and the war in Afghanistan and the threat of war in Iraq and . . . last week Swofford's "Jarhead" (Scribner, $24), released early in March, was 45th and climbing on USA Today's best seller list and already in its seventh printing.

Wait until the books on the Iraq war hit the stands, especially since there are more then 500 reporters, many of whom were shut out of the Gulf War, "imbedded" among the fighting men themselves. I'll bet at least 499 of them already have taken notes for the book they are going to write.

Think of how many trees must die so that Ted Koppel can explain what it was like to sit in a tent in the desert and wonder if the Iraqi bringing him breakfast and a copy of the New York Times is really a suicide bomber.

HEALTH NOTES

Setting the stage for new initiatives, challenges

By Steve Bobo
SPECIAL TO THE MARINER

For the Board of Health, this Town Meeting was a success. We began the Rails With Trails adventure which, at minimum will give us a an insight into the possibilities of pedestrian or bicycle communication between parts of town which now are known to only a few hearty souls who can cope with the brambles. I see the rail trail helping us whether we have a train or not. In talking to Dick Avery, he envisions that at some future time, it can provide access between the library, Strawberry Parfait, the swim center, the Little League fields, and eventually, if we get it, the T Station, the cemetery, golf club, and who knows what on the way to North Scituate. It can connect to the sidewalk planned for Forest Avenue, and the sidewalk along North Main Street. Also, as "walking" Mark Fenton told us at the meeting it will improve the interface between the neighborhood and any eventual train corridor. I refer you to the report on other trails which have improved towns all over the United States. It's available at the Board of Health.

We have updated our smoking regulations and have some new ideas about how to strengthen the initiative for our younger citizens. We promise, at the Board of Health, we will not forget the need to continue pressure to reduce the dependence on tobacco.

I see the rail trail helping us whether we have a train or not.

The Water Department has taken a bold step which we were reluctant to do since it was only peripherally related to the Town's health concerns, and that is to attack in a very visible manner the problems which modern turf management has brought to our neighborhoods. The use of quick release nutrient rich lawn care products is a hidden specter which threatens our ground water as well as our water supply. The Board spends considerable time in trying to make people understand the relationship between too much fertilizer for our lawns and gardens and the condition of our ponds, streams and water bodies. In a way, it's the same problem we have with obesity and overweight. Many of us consume too much — as do our lawns and gardens. Both would be healthier if we cut back.

Finally, we are broadening the discussions about growth and its pressures. After years of trying, we will have a fully appropriate expansion of the Stop and Shop. This has been needed to foster better competition between the two stores, and will be good for both, as well as the town.

But the bigger issue is planning. I talked to Rick Swanborg Chairman of the Growth and Development Committee at the meeting, who told me that he had four bylaw changes planned, but was thwarted on all but one: the apartment amnesty. The town has to find a better way to provide a needed update to our planning process. The pressure of 40B is giving us the impetus to do something. It's necessary that our leaders in the Selectmen's office find a way to make our various boards work more effectively together. One thing which is helping is a better communication between boards. This dialog, fostered in part, by Woody Chittick of the ZBA, is paying off and should be formalized for all the Boards and Commissions. Similarly, the Growth and Development Committee has appeared before all Town boards, soliciting ideas, and offering valuable solutions from other towns which may work for Cohasset. Change is a difficult process, but unless we think we've got the perfect system, we're going to have to do it. Thank God we have so many intelligent interested citizens who can help us with the task.

Steve Bobo is chairman of the Cohasset Board of Health.

Boutique is a mess

TO THE EDITOR:

Mrs. Jensen provided the Mariner with a copy of her letter for publication.

Dear Mr. Brown and other Selectmen:

I was at the dump last Wednesday and was disgusted with the state of the "Boutique":

1.) There were broken (I mean really smashed) items; torn, soiled paperbacks, broken lampshades, furniture with legs missing, etc.

2.) There were items left there which were clearly very unclean: child's car seat with spilled food all over it.

3.) Someone was loading up his van with things which he said he was going to sell in his own yard sale in the spring. (I was told by one of the workmen that not only was this a common occurrence, but that antique dealers regularly raid the "Boutique" to take away things to be sold in their shops).

I used to find treasures there, but no more. It is disorganized, there are no rules, and people leave large items in order to avoid the dumping fee. Furthermore, commercial enterprises leave the rest of us with worthless junk.

I used to be secure in the fact that if I brought unwanted items to the boutique that they would find a good home with someone else. I am afraid to do that anymore for fear they will simply be bulldozed away in the "clear-out" procedure which occurs once a week.

Can't something be done to bring our old "Boutique" back?

The war in Iraq can't bury Big Dig news

STATEHOUSE ROUNDUP

CRAIG SANDLER

A recap and analysis of the week in state government.

State government is conveniently generating less news than usual, at the exact time there's less time and space for it in the media. The focus of the week on Beacon Hill was the big things about to happen.

The most important of them is the opening of the Big Dig. This problematic tartan of tunnels, connections, vents, footings and utility lines is finally about to add up to something other than $14.6 billion.

That's how much the depression of I-93 and the rest of the mega-project cost, but the people in charge seemed anything but depressed. They announced the closure of lanes and important off-ramps – Exit 26 to Storrow Drive being the most important – and a series of detours as workers close down the elevated northbound Artery and the tunnel system takes over. Details: www.bigdig.com.

So, at the top of the news in Massachusetts were two huge enterprises in which the government had the opportunity to prove it can do things right – even as people continued to debate whether the enterprises should have been done at all.

In Iraq, the Bush administration can achieve an anti-Vietnam with a swift victory without extensive collateral damage and without the formation of a foreign policy morass. People could wind up with a higher opinion of their government. And back in Boston, if the promises of the Big Dig are kept – shorter rush hours, a faster commute, a more beautiful city – the trust level will rise. People may even say it was worth it.

But in both cases, the short term is unpleasant and the assurances of the government just rhetoric. The test of the huge investments and gambles lies ahead. Just to tie this all together, the Romney administration announced it wanted to name the new roadway beneath the city the Liberty Tunnel. Legislation to do so was filed. The name is intended to honor all Massachusetts veterans, and in Gov. Romney's phrase, serve as a "fitting reminder of the sacrifices made in the name of liberty."

The proposed naming occurred as the House worked out its differences over the language of a resolution supporting and honoring the men and women currently serving. Republicans proposed a version that praised President Bush too much for the liking of some; eventually a compromise was worked out.

And back in Boston, if the promises of the Big Dig are kept – shorter rush hours, a faster commute, a more beautiful city – the trust level will rise.

Some kvetching over this debate definitely could be heard. The complaining ran along the lines of, "I know – why don't you do something about the $3 billion budget deficit you haven't solved, and then squabble over the feel-good resolutions?"

But the politicians pointed out expressions of support play an important part in public life, especially in wartime. They know a major part of their job is to set the right tone. They went hyper-patriotic, pledging and praying and hymning. That's part of their job, but the public has been waiting a long time for things to go well on the substantive side. And here's really big news: there's a chance they will.

• Board adopts "persistently dangerous" approach. The Board of Education approved a motion that allows students to transfer out of schools with consistently high rates of student violence. It's part of the federal education reform effort – No Child Left Behind.

• UMass treasurer warns of damage if plan stopped. Stephen Lenhardt said canceling a $75 million biology and chemistry complex for UMass Amherst, and a badly-needed dorm at Dorchester, will hurt the school's prestige and the education of thousands of young Bay Staters. The administration is holding up a $371 million bond package out of concern it's politically influenced and inadequately documented.

• Prim board rejects Romney surplus property plan. The state board that manages the state's $25.3 billion pension fund on unanimously voted its "strong opposition" to Gov. Romney's proposal on surplus state property. The governor had included a $180 million plan in his transfer surplus state land to the pension fund, in lieu of cash, so the state could use the cash to balance next year's budget. A Romney administration official said the state, even though it owns thousands of acres of surplus land, does a poor job selling it or utilizing it. Pension fund managers said they are equally incapable of selling the properties without incurring significant new costs.

• Open letter questions Romney's UMass reorg. A consortium of businesses, the Mass High Tech Council and the education-policy group Mass Insight sent a letter to the governor and UMass President William Bulger, criticizing the governor's proposal to reorganize the UMass system and eliminate Bulger's central office. The business leaders said the state benefits from a statewide system comprising different campuses. Community college leaders, after a separate meeting with Romney, publicly ripped his plans to consolidate operations.

• Stalled Medicaid bill begins moving. A measure the administration says is critical to changing Medicaid rules and saving nearly half a billion dollars had languished in the House clerk's office for a month, but moved forward. Representatives sent the matter to the Health Care Committee a day after a top administration official warned the savings are in jeopardy without swift action.

•Death penalty brings out zero proponents. In a development unthinkable several years ago, no one testified in favor of capital punishment during a hearing of the Criminal Justice Committee. Legislative supporters of the death penalty suggested the dearth of supporters was accounted for by the presumption that capital punishment — for years a high-profile policy proposal — is a non-starter in the Legislature this session.

• Permit application blitz signals wind power fight. Winergy, a Long Island-based firm, has filed applications for seven wind farms involving 800 turbines with the Executive Office of Environmental Affairs. Environmentalist critics of the firm and its plans say the applications are poorly drawn, and Winergy just wants to win permits so it can sell them to other companies. Officials of the firm maintained there's nothing wrong with filing lots of applications to find out which ones get approval.

Beacon Hill Roll Call

By Bob Katzen
beaconhill@aol.com

March 24-28

Representative Garrett J. Bradley (D-Hingham) (617) 722-2120 Room 472

Senator Robert L. Hedlund (R-Weymouth) (617) 722-1646 Room 413F

QUESTIONS

BHRC is sponsored and underwritten by Fleet Bank as a public service for readers of the Mariner. It is written by Bob Katzen who has covered the legislature for over 25 years and has been providing this feature to newspapers since 1975.

THE HOUSE AND SENATE. BHRC records local representatives' votes on four roll calls from the week of March 24-28. There were no roll calls in the Senate last week.

IRAQ RESOLUTIONS

House 148-0, approved resolutions supporting the efforts of the president, as commander in chief, in the conflict against Iraq, offering support, encouragement and prayers for the safety of all the troops serving overseas and expressing gratitude to all members of the United States Armed Forces who are participating in the military operations in the Persian Gulf region. The resolutions also express hope for a speedy, successful and safe conclusion to the hostilities and for the reconstruction of Iraq as a free and democratic nation. There was no debate on these resolutions that were drafted as a compromise when a group of Democrats indicated they would offer alternative resolutions. The group objected to earlier versions that they said went beyond just support for the troops and included praise for the leadership of President Bush and references to Saddam Hussein's defiance of United Nations resolutions. (A "Yea" vote is for the resolutions).

RULES FOR BUDGET DEBATE (H 3730)

House 106-38, approved a set of rules to be followed when the House considers the fiscal 2004 state budget beginning April 30. A key provision requires that any member who proposes an increase in spending in excess of $100,000 also offer a proposal decreasing spending by an equal or greater amount. Other provisions include requiring any tax hikes or tax cuts to be considered first followed by consideration of all other amendments and prohibiting earmarking of revenues from tax hikes for specific programs. Supporters said these new rules would impose fiscal responsibility in light of the state's huge deficit, prevent members from offering new spending without making corresponding cuts and establish how much revenue the state will receive prior to debate on where to spend the money. Opponents said the new rules give more power to Speaker Finneran and his Ways and Means Committee including allowing them to propose a budget without the "increase/decrease" restriction placed on members who offer amendments to it. They said the new rules are anti-democratic and will further decrease the input and power of individual members. (A "Yea" vote is for the new rules. A "Nay" vote is against the new rules).

OPEN MEETING ON BUDGET (H 3730)

House 37-109, rejected an amendment requiring the House Ways and Means Committee to hold an open meeting at the Statehouse to answer questions from the public and House members about the fiscal 2004 state budget. The meeting would be held shortly following the release of the budget and would have to be open to the public for at least three hours. Amendment supporters said this would open up the democratic process and allow anyone to ask questions about the budget after it is released. Amendment opponents said the Ways and Means Committee has held hearings and public discussions on the budget and noted explicit details and explanations will be included when the budget is released. (A "Yea" vote is for requiring the public hearing. A "Nay" vote is against requiring the hearing).

INCREASE AND DECREASE (H 3730)

House 19-125, rejected an amendment eliminating the section of the new budget rules requiring that any member who proposes an increase in spending in excess of $100,000 also offer a proposal cutting spending by an equal or greater amount. Amendment supporters said this mandate is simplistic and unfair and will pit one program against another. They argued that the House has produced many balanced budgets for years without this type of restriction. Amendment opponents said the state's fiscal crisis demands that members be fiscally responsible and argued that this restriction will ensure that the budget remains balanced. (A "Yea" vote is for the amendment eliminating the "increase/decrease" requirement. A "Nay" vote is against the amendment and favors the "increase/decrease" requirement).

Candidates score style points at debate for selectman's race

By Mary Ford
MFORD@CNC.COM

It couldn't compete with reality TV's Survivor series featured on Thursday nights.

But their styles were different enough that if anyone of them had had the chance – they'd have voted the other two off the island.

— political analysis —

The Selectmen's office, which itself is not immune to controversial meetings, provided the sound stage last Thursday for a debate featuring the three candidates seeking a three-year term on the Board of Selectmen.

While the nearly 90-minute event, hosted and moderated by Noel Collins, provided few sparks – cable-TV viewers and those in the live audience had the chance to see the incumbent, Michael Sullivan, and challengers Gabriel Gomez and Roger Q. Hill sitting side by side for the first time.

Voters at the polls, which are open from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. Saturday at Town Hall, will have the final say as to who will fill the selectman's seat until 2006. [For candidate profiles see page 11.]

In the end, it did come down to style. The candidates agree the controversial, proposed Avalon Bay apartment community is not right for Cohasset and won't solve the town's affordable housing needs. All agree Saturday's Prop. 2-1/2 vote is needed to balance the books, although they differ on the public process and how selectmen should deal with budgetary issues. All understand the town's tax base is primarily residential, but they disagree if anything can be done to change that. The three men love the town and want to preserve its character.

While none of the candidates think Avalon is the way to solve the town's affordable housing problem, there was some finger pointing on how to deal with Virginia-based developer.

Hill, a lifelong resident, was the most passionate about the fact that many elderly and town employees can't afford to stay in Cohasset and therefore solving the town's lack of affordable housing is critical. A strong Avalon critic, he also accused selectmen of "taking a back seat" on the Avalon issue.

Gomez, who is a relative newcomer to town, didn't mince words and gave mostly short direct answers. He accused Avalon of being "exploiters and corrupters" and didn't think the people were being informed about what was going on.

Sullivan, a seasoned incumbent with 13 years in elected office, was more laid back. He said he "certainly didn't want the project to go forward as it is today." He also fended off criticism about his attendance at a meeting earlier in the week between some town and Avalon officials that wasn't posted. He apologized and said he "was asked to attend and didn't put the meeting together." Sullivan said it was best to keep the lines of communication open with Avalon and it did not occur to him the meeting might be in violation of the Open Meeting Law.

Gomez said the town has become too reliant on Prop. 2-1/2 overrides to make ends meet and said his business acumen and education would be a plus in helping the town with its fiscal planning. He criticized selectmen for changing the override number several times and said the voters had not been educated about how the numbers were obtained.

Sullivan defended the selectmen's handling of the budget year after year, and enumerated the town services that residents expect. He took great umbrage at Gomez's remarks and said selectmen worked hard to arrive at a number that was reasonable.

Hill pointed out the cutbacks in state aid and defended Town Manager Mark Haddad's efforts to keep the override as low as possible. But he said the town's debt service needed to be reduced.

Gomez said he would work with businesses to attract them to Cohasset to help increase the town's commercial tax base.

Sullivan said increasing the commercial tax base is difficult because there is little commercially zoned land in town, which is 93 percent residential.

Hill, who owns the strip mall where Atlantic Bagel is located, noted his property was part of the 7 percent zoned for business. He also said the former Norfolk Webb site where Avalon is proposed has been vacant for 10 years and hadn't attracted any commercial tenants. He said Cohasset is too far for most businesses to relocate.

Gomez disagreed saying there was a vast number of small businesses that could be enticed to come to town.

When it comes to the character of Cohasset, the three candidates agreed the town's unique qualities and beauty make it a wonderful place to live.

But Hill, who noted the love for Cohasset runs deep in his heart, said on issues such as revitalizing the harbor, too much took place behind the scenes and the public needs to have more input in the village design improvements.

Sullivan, who said his commitment to Cohasset remains strong and he enjoys being a selectman, described the town as an "incredible place to bring up children." He said maintaining Cohasset's character while rehabilitating its infrastructure is critical.

Gomez said it was time for the town to focus on the future and not the past. He said the town needed a fresh voice of responsible leadership. He said the beauty and friendliness of Cohasset drew him to town.

who in the past several months have struggled to balance budgets amidst rising costs and projected cuts in state aid.

Under Gov. Mitt Romney's budget, the town would lose about $307,000, or 10.87 percent, of its local aid. That figure could increase depending on what the House of Representatives and the Senate propose in their budgets.

Town officials hope that in reducing the override amount from $485,000 to $350,000 they have shown residents that expenses were cut as much as possible without jeopardizing the level of services provided by the town.

Town Manager Mark Haddad and finance director Michael Buckley have cut the municipal side of the budget by $53,000, a reduction of 0.73 percent from this fiscal year. (See sidebar)

Haddad told voters at Town Meeting on Saturday this was the hardest budget to balance since 1991, the last time the state significantly cut local aid. He said the cost of health insurance and other benefits had risen $330,000 on the municipal side of the budget, an increase attributed younger employees signing up for benefits that older employees had declined in the past.

School Committee chairman Rick Flynn told Town Meeting that new costs in the school system totaled more than $800,000, forcing the committee to make cuts of more than $400,000 just to balance its budget. (See sidebar)

The school budget, set at $11,265,000, will see an increase in fiscal year 2004 of only $333,000, or 3 percent. That's low compared to the last five years, when the average increase of the school budget has been almost 7 percent.

Selectmen unanimously recommended the operating budget, including the override, at Town Meeting. The budget was also recommended by the majority of the Advisory Committee.

Advisory Committee Chairman Maureen Jerz suggested that the town look into cutting legal costs further and trimming union pay raises when they are renegotiated next year. Haddad said the town was also exploring the possibility of lowering the percentage of health care benefits it covers for municipal and school employees.

Town officials hope that in reducing the override amount from $485,000 to $350,000 they have shown residents that expenses were cut as much as possible without jeopardizing the level of services provided by the town.

In the event of a failed override, town officials have agreed that schools would need to cut another $210,000 from their budget while the municipal side would need to reduce costs by $140,000. The School Committee has outlined potential cuts for that scenario (see sidebar), but Haddad said he had not identified any possible cuts on the municipal side.

The town originally anticipated a general override in fiscal year 2005 but, according to Haddad, the cut in state aid necessitated moving it up a year. Haddad said if the override passed, the town would not need another override next year.

Override history:

If approved, this would be the eighth general override the town has approved since Proposition 2 -1/2 became law in 1981.

- arranged to increase revenue from the Recreation Department by $47,000.

On the school side of the budget, the School Committee has:

- eliminated a position through attrition at the Osgood School and replaced three retiring teachers at the CMHS with teachers at starting salary, saving about $170,000;
- eliminated an adjustment counselor at the CMHS, with the position's duties absorbed by guidance councilors, saving $60,000;

Additional potential cuts in school budget if override fails:

- Reduce Middle school athletic program, $35,000
- Reductions in elementary PE, music & art, $60,000
- Technology aide at Osgood, $27,319
- Deer Hill teacher, $40,000

Chamber survey says the South Shore wants train several labor, business and government officials. Conspicuously absent were Greenbush critics, state Sen. Robert L. Hedlund, R-Weymouth, and state Rep. Garrett Bradley, D-Hingham, who were not invited, a chamber spokesman said when asked.

Leading the pro-train charge for the Chamber is its president and Chief Executive Officer, Ron Zooleck, a Hingham resident, who didn't mince words about those on the other side of the tracks, so to speak.

"The opposition has never said the train is not needed," Zooleck said. He accused train opponents who have stalled the project with lawsuits of continually driving up the cost of Greenbush, which is now estimated at some $464 million. Despite the price tag, the Chamber says the train should be built and is key to the economic health and quality of life in the region.

Zooleck said the time has never been better to borrow money than now.

"We urge the administration to move forward immediately," he said.

Propelling the survey, which was conducted by Atlantic Research and Consulting of Boston for the chamber, was the MBTA's decision to halt construction on Greenbush for six months until permitting and remaining right-of-way issues can be resolved. During the hiatus, the Romney administration promised to take a new look at the project.

The scientific survey, which polled 454 residents and has margin of error of plus or minus 5 percent, shows a significant majority of South Shore residents in Cohasset, Hull, Marshfield, Norwell, Scituate and Weymouth favor restoration of the Greenbush line. The only town that was a statistical "dead heat" was Hingham, which showed 43 percent opposed or strongly opposed and 41 percent in favor or strongly in favor. The poll was conducted from March 18-20.

Peter Hooper of Atlantic Research, the polling firm, said the survey was conducted randomly. He explained the number of residents polled in each town varied according to the population; more residents were polled in Weymouth than Cohasset, for example.

Averaging the results across the towns, 64 percent of the respondents said they were in favor of Greenbush line restoration (a 4 or 5 on a five-point scale); 18 percent were neutral (a rating of 3) and 19 percent were opposed to the project (a rating of 1 or 2), he said.

More than 70 percent of the respondents in Hull, Marshfield and Norwell favored the train; the train in Cohasset had a 60 percent favorability rating, with 62 percent in Weymouth, and 64 percent in Scituate.

In the interviews respondents were asked for their age, gender, education and income; how many in the household commute to work or school outside the community; to which towns they commute and how they commute. They were asked how they rate the current commute to Boston; and if they believe there is a problem getting in and out of Boston.

In addition to whether they favor restoration of the Greenbush line, respondents were also asked their opinions on the economic benefits of the train; safety of grade crossings; pollution; and if the train would bring unwanted crowds to the South Shore; and about its cost, among other questions.

Hooper said support for the train remains largely unchanged since the first survey was conducted in 1995. He said residents overall feel there is a problem getting in and out of Boston; the train was the most popular option to improve the commute; and most see it as the option most favorable to the environment.

State Rep. Ronald Mariano, D-Weymouth, said the train — with is $28 million worth of design improvements to Weymouth Landing — would be a tremendous benefit to Weymouth. Mariano said state Rep. James Murphy who also represents Weymouth, and state Rep. Frank Hynes, D-Marshfield, also strongly support the train. He said the three of them along with state Sen. Michael Morrissey, D-Quincy, met with Commonwealth Development Sec. Douglas Foy, who coordinates the departments of housing, transportation and environmental affairs, recently to express their concerns over the halt in Greenbush construction.

"We are extremely worried the halt will provide fuel for the anti-train folks," he said.

Mariano said $100 million has already been spent on Greenbush and if the project didn't go forward, the MBTA would use the room in its capital budget for other projects.

"This (Greenbush) is the most far along in the MBTA's capital program," he said.

"I'm hoping the administration with our advocacy will evaluate the project in the context to which we have described it," he said. Mariano also read a statement from Hynes, who could not attend, but who is vice chairman of the House Committee on Transportation. Hynes stated Greenbush would put the South Shore on equal footing with the other areas around Boston, which all have train service.

Greenbush is expected to attract 4,200 daily riders, which are the MBTA's own figures, according to Terry Fancher of the Chamber, who sat on the Citizens Advisory Committee that commented on the Greenbush environmental feasibility study.

Although the permits for Greenbush are being challenged by opponents, the chamber says the project will ultimately prevail.

Road race joins polio fight

The race gets underway at 1 p.m. and starts and finishes at the Town Common. Because the churches on the common are holding services, the 10 kilometer fun walk at 10 a.m. starts and ends at Sandy Beach. Both events follow the same route, along Cohasset's waterfront which is considered one of the prettiest running courses on the East Coast, Guild says.

Race day registration ($18 for the race and $15 for the fun walk) is from 9 a.m.-noon at the South Shore Community Center, 3 N. Main St. Race T-shirts are guaranteed to the first 800 runners.

Volunteers from the Appalachia Service Project, a volunteer home building ministry, will man the water stops.

Cohasset Rotary Club president Damian Grozier explained Rotary International had wanted the world to be polio free by the year 2000. That date proved to be too ambitious so the organization refocused its efforts last year to raise some $80 million to eradicate the disease from the planet by 2006.

With Sunday's road race, the Cohasset Rotary launches a three-year effort to raise $10,000 for the cause and therefore, hopes for a good turnout.

"We'd love to have as many people come out as possibly can," Grozier said.

Nee said the Cohasset Rotary will continue to support local programs, such as high school scholarships, Wellspring in Hull and Father Bill's in Quincy. The club has two main fundraisers a year, the race and selling advertisements for the Cohasset Rotary phonebooks. Early efforts on the phone book show an increase in sales over last year.

Nee said seeing what some children who are afflicted with the disease have to go through needlessly was a wakeup call. He said the polio fight is an opportunity for the club, which with 25 members is relatively small, to be part of something really big.

"As a Rotary club we felt obligated to support Rotary's worldwide mission," Nee says. "We viewed this as how often do we get to pitch in globally to help eradicate a disease that continues to be a problem."

Rotary International's efforts to rid polio in affected areas include: public education to promote immunization; getting the vaccine to children in remote regions; forming public-private partnerships that fortify government health programs; and strengthening a global laboratory network to support disease surveillance efforts after polio has been eradicated.

Facts about polio

- Typically affects children under three
- Can result in paralysis and even death
- Still exists in 10 countries in the Eastern Hemisphere
- Global polio eradication is the premier goal of Rotary International

Emergence of pitchers seen as key to Skippers baseball season

By Mike Spellman
MSPELLMAN@CNC.COM

If baseball really is, as the popular old expression says, two-thirds pitching, then it appears as if the Cohasset High baseball team will enter the 2003 campaign with a whole lot of question marks.

Sophomore Ted Straughn has, as expected, quickly solidified himself as the team's staff ace, but projected number two hurler Mike Snowdale has come down with some arm problems, and there is virtually zero mound experience behind this duo.

"If we can get two or three of the pitchers we're looking at now to step up, I feel we can be a pretty good baseball team this year," said first year Cohasset coach Al Gallotta. "If not, we're probably no better than an average team. Right now, pitching is the big question."

And if Al Gallotta , the former Archbishop Williams Athletic Director who brings to CHS nearly 30 years of baseball coaching experience, can't figure it out, it seems unlikely that anyone can.

Senior Terry Baroudi and juniors John Andrade, Mike Dooley, and Jon Downing all saw time on the mound in scrimmages last week against Duxbury and Thayer Academy, with results being mixed.

Senior Chris McKenna, the only lefthanded pitching candidate, could also see some time down the road on the mound, according to the coach.

The Skippers took a 1-1 tie into the fourth inning against Duxbury on Thursday, with Straughn shutting down the bigger and higher division playing Dragons past the game's midpoint, but things unraveled once the hard-throwing sophomore was relieved on the mound.

Overall, Gallotta said he was encouraged by his team's performance against the strong Div. 2 team, and also had a few good things to report following Saturday's meeting with Thayer.

The host Braintree school won on the strength of a few big innings in which Coach G. paraded out a series of pitchers.

"But that's what these games are for," the long time coach reminded. "We were auditioning players, and some made out better than others."

Still, the coach gave the impression that nothing is cast in stone.

"It looks like we'll have to finalize spots two through five in the rotation as we go," he said.

One factor which could complicate matters significantly for Gallotta and his pitching plans is the Monday-Tuesday-Thursday playing schedule employed by the South Shore League. The majority of leagues in Eastern Mass. stick to a Monday-Wednesday-Friday slate in deference to pitching management, with a day off between games and three days rest between the first and last games of the week providing undeniable advantages to coaches. However, with a few SSL schools (including Cohasset) unable to assure Sophomore Elizabeth Stone is back looking to build on last year's unbeaten season in singles play and lead the Cohasset girls to a Sectional title.

Eye on the prize

Girls tennis team sets sites on first ever Sectional crown

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

After 11 straight tournament years, seven consecutive seasons with at least a share of the South Shore League title, several years in which the entire starting line-up made the league All-Star team, and multiple runs deep into the playoffs, the one thing that has eluded the Cohasset girls tennis team has been a Sectional Championship. This could all change with the line-up they have in place this year.

At the top of the line-up is sophomore sensation Elizabeth Stone, who went unbeaten as a freshman, dropping only a handful of games in the entire season of match play. She held her own against Mass's top ranked high school female at the State Individuals Tourney, eventually losing 3-6, 4-6. Other than that, Stone won nearly every other match at second singles by a doughnut score, 6-0, 6-0. She will make the transition to the number one spot, and could very well achieve similar results, especially with the aces from Norwell and Harwich having graduated.

The number one of the previous two seasons, senior captain Lindsay Grossman, has shifted to first doubles. Grossman capped a remarkable singles career, in which she compiled a record of 44-7, including an undefeated freshman year at second singles.

Quality over quantity

Roster challenged boys tennis team edges Hanover in opener

By David Ingber
CORRESPONDENT

The boys tennis team began their quest to prove the adage "quality over quantity" this past Tuesday, beating non-league foe Hanover. With a roster that features the bare minimum required to fill out a line-up card, the Skippers took their first steps toward a third straight playoff berth.

The team finished second in the league last year with an 8-4 SSL record, 8-6 overall. The team lost no one to graduation, but several to the newly formed Cohasset Ping-Pong Club and several more to those who opted not to play a sport this spring. But with the help of two talented freshman, this team could very well be better than the previous two tourney qualifiers.

A core of three seniors, all returning lettermen, will anchor the line-up. The Mariners go-to guy for all things concerned with men's tennis will again take up the number one singles spot, his second year there. The returning captain hopes to improve upon last years 8-5 record, as three of the number ones from last year's SSL graduated.

Ingber started off his year well, beating Hanover's Ben Barr in the season opener on Tuesday.

In the 3-2 win, Cohasset swept the three singles matches, featuring wins by junior Tim Anton at second singles and senior Ross Lieb-Lappen at third.

Lieb-Lappen and senior Scott Faber, last year's number one doubles team, have split up to cement the roster more completely. Lieb-Lappen will make a permanent shift to his more natural position at third singles, while Scott Faber will likely team up with freshman Nils Sceery for an impressive front-

Mariner All-Scholastic hockey team

Cohasset's Anderson, Davis and Durkin named among area's elite

The size of this All-Scholastic hockey team—24, the biggest team we've ever had outside of football— is testament to how difficult this selection process was.

What can we say? It was a banner season on the ice in Marinerland, highlighted by Hingham for the second year in a row finishing third in the state's "Super 8 Tourney" and winding up as the state's last public school team left standing.

Of the 12 public schools we cover, nine qualified for the state tourney. Scituate, after a 15-3-1 regular season, made it all the way to the Sectional semifinals, where it fell in a 4-3 heartbreaker to Blue Hills, while Norwell, Cohasset, Marshfield and Braintree advanced to the quarterfinals.

Honestly, several of the young men you see listed below as "Honorable Mentions" received serious consideration for All-Scholastic acknowledgement. We would have loved to have added many of them, with Cohasset's South Shore League All-Star defenseman Mike Devine being a particularly difficult omission, but we had to cut things off somewhere.

In the end, we limited ourselves to a team of just 24, and, after consulting with area coaches, we do feel secure that we chose the most deserving hockey players in Marinerland for this honor:

John Durkin - Senior
(Capt.)
Center - Cohasset

John Durkin

Led the South Shore League in scoring with 42 points (22 goals, 20 assists) to pace the Skippers to a 10-6-4 record and a second straight SSL championship...two time SSL all-star...team MVP...had 36 points last year, and went over 100 points for his career...explosive offensive talent who combines great skating, hands and vision with a deadly accurate shot...Patriot Ledger All-Scholastic...scored two hat tricks this season...most memorable goal was a tie-breaker with 14.8 seconds left in OT to lift Cohasset over eventual Sectional champ Bourne, 2-1...played the majority of the time on the penalty kill as well as power plays...also a standout football and lacrosse player for CHS...has a few colleges interested, but will attend Prep School next year in the hopes of increasing options...looking at Deerfield, Berkshire, Pomfret Academy and Kimball Union...Cohasset hockey coach John Blake: "John is an explosive offensive talent. He just has a knack for scoring. He was definitely our go to guy. When John had success, the team had success. There was definitely a lot of pressure on him this year, but he still came up with some big goals."

Tom Anderson - Senior
(Capt.)
Defense - Cohasset

After totaling 34 points (21 goals, 13 assists) to finish among the league leaders as a junior, Tom volunteered this season to move back to defense, where graduation hit the Skippers hard...finished with 17 points (seven goals, 10 assists) and played a huge role in Cohasset's second straight South Shore League championship...one of the SSL's most Already a top notch hockey talent, it was the physical play of Cohasset's Tom Anderson (#2) which really set him apart and made him a no-brainer selection for All-Scholastic acknowledgement.

feared checkers...6-foot-1, 200 pound bruiser is a force in front of the net...played on both special teams and easily led the team in ice time...very strong skater and puck-handler...finished with over 100 career points...two-time SSL all-star...Patriot Ledger All-Scholastic...one of just seven hockey players in Eastern Mass. named to the "Massachusetts Alliance for the Promotion of Sportsmanship Hockey All-Star Team"...also a Mariner All-Scholastic selection for football this past fall...also a team captain and standout in football and lacrosse for CHS...Honor Roll student...is leaning toward playing college lacrosse, but may also try hockey...also active in drama and singing...looking at Delaware, St. Michaels, Bryant College, Gettysburg and Connecticut College...Cohasset hockey coach John Blake: "John gave up some glory by volunteering to play defense and you can't believe how much that meant to this team. There's no doubt he was one of the best defensemen on the South Shore, and he was a great team leader too. He led by setting a great example, and when something needed to be said in the locker room he said it."

Tom Anderson

Matt Davis - Senior (Capt.)
Forward - Cohasset

Might have made a run at South Shore League scoring title if he hadn't volunteered to play defense the first five games of the year due to injuries on the blueline...finished with 34 points (15 goals, 19 assists) to help lead the Skippers to their second straight SSL crown...a scintillating skater and puck handler who seems almost unstoppable in one-on-one situations in the open ice...two time South Shore League all-star...biggest goal of the year came after an electrifying end-to-end rush in the final seconds of the first period that put the Skippers up for good at 2-1 in the showdown for first place in the SSL with Harwich...won Norm Delaney Student Athlete Award for having the team's top GPA...also a standout for CHS in football and lacrosse, which he also captains... has been recruited to play lacrosse at Ursinis University (Penn.), where he will major in Biologicical Science... Cohasset hockey coach John Blake: "I felt bad for any defenseman who was matched up against Matt one-on-one, because Matt won just about all of those battles and generally made them look pretty bad while doing it. He's just an incredible skater and puck handler in the open ice. He helped us out immensely on defense at the beginning of the year, and then he really gave us a huge lift up front when he moved back up there."

Matt Davis

Greg Genovese - Senior (Capt.)
Forward - Hingham

Carrying on the strong hockey tradition in his family, Genovese was the team's second-leading scorer this season, racking up 41 points on 20 goals, 21 assists... He, fellow All-Scholastic Garret Daigler, and younger brother Mike teamed for one of the most productive lines around, combining for 110 points this season...He helped lead the Harbormen (18-5-1) to their second-straight semifinal appearance in the Super Eight tourney...There, he had one of his best games, scoring the game-tying goal with less than a minute left in their opening round game against Austin Prep, which Hingham went on to win 5-4 in double-overtime...Genovese was also a defensive contributor...He plans to attend Pomfret. Hingham coach Garrett Reagan: "He's been a tremendous player for us. He has very good hockey sense and passes well."

Greg Genovese

Jed McDonald - Senior (Capt.)
Defense - Hingham

A two-time Mariner All-Scholastic, McDonald was again the Harbormen's leader on the defensive ice...Able to anticipate and read an opponent's offense so well, McDonald's defensive play was instrumental in several big games, and helped Hingham (18-5-1) land itself back in the semi-finals of the elite Super Eight tourney...Also a contributor on the offensive end, McDonald racked up 28 points on eight goals, 20 assists...He moved from forward to defense his sophomore season, in which he scored the game-winning goal in a 5-4 victory over St. John's Shrewsbury in the Div. 1 State Championships...He had four assists in a regular-season win over St. J's this season...McDonald plans to attend prep school. Hingham coach Garrett Reagan: "He's been a great leader and terrific captain. He's one of the top defensemen in the state. He's a good skater with good size and he plays smart. That's a great combination."

Jed McDonald

Garret Daigler - Senior (Capt.)
Forward - Hingham

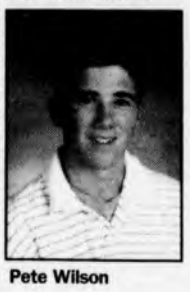
The Harbormen's leading scorer this season, Daigler racked up 48 points on 21 goals, 27 assists...He teamed with fellow All-Scholastic Greg Genovese and Mike Genovese for a frontline that produced 110 goals this season...Daigler always stepped up in the big games, usually putting in multiple goals and/or assists...Games of note were his 3 goals, 3 assists games against St. John's Prep and Billerica, as well as a 2 goal, 1 assist effort against St. John's Shrewsbury...His work on the frontline was key to the Harbormen's (18-5-1) second-straight run in the Super Eight tourney, where the team again reached the semifinals...Daigler plans to attend Pomfret. Hingham coach Garrett Reagan: "He got a lot of big goals for us and had multiple goal efforts. He put in a goal in almost all the games this year. He handles the puck very well and passes well."

Mike McNulty - Senior
Defense - Hingham

Mike McNulty

Another leader on the defensive ice, McNulty had a solid season for the Harbormen...A two-year defensive player, McNulty also contributed on the offensive end, pitching in 16 points on 3 goals, 13 assists...Came up big defensively in several key games and also helped fuel wins, particularly in his 2 goal, 2 assist effort in a regular-season win over Billerica...His work on both ends of the ice helped get Hingham (18-5-1) back to the Super Eight tournament, where they again reached the semifinals for the second-straight year...McNulty plans to attend prep school. Hingham coach Garrett Reagan: "Since his move to defense he's improved tremendously. He's a much more experienced player and has a great work ethic. He's been a steady player for us."

Pete Wilson - Junior (Capt.)
Forward - Marshfield



Pete Wilson

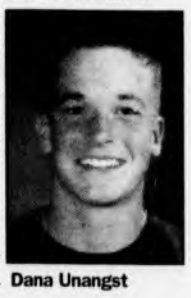
A two-time Old Colony League All-star, Wilson is making his second appearance on the Mariner All-Scholastic team...Wilson again led the Rams in scoring with 49 points on 21 goals, 28 assists, which was second overall in the OCL...Just a junior, Wilson already surpassed the 100-point career plateau and finished the year at 114...A strong and undeniable force on the offensive end, Wilson also contributes defensively, leading Marshfield (12-6-5) to the Div. 2 South Sectional tourney, and third-place finish in the OCL...Wilson also plays baseball at MHS and will be among the top returning players to next year's hockey squad. Marshfield coach Dan Connolly: "Pete is the offensive leader on the team and is just as strong in the defensive zone. He is one of the main reasons we did as well as we did this year."

Tim Bonham - Junior
Goalie - Marshfield

Tim Bonham

A three-year starter in the net, Bonham impressed several area coaches with his play this season... Marshfield lost several key defensemen last season and Bonham stepped up, posting two shutouts this season, en route to a 2.45 goals against average...An OCL All-star, Bonham posted a shutout in the league All-star game...His ability to read opposing teams' offenses, quick hands, and sheer strength is what made him most successful between the pipes...Kept the Rams (12-6-5) in several games this season, as evidenced by the five ties and made several key saves in their victories, which helped the Rams take third in the OCL...Bonham will once again claim his post in the net next year. Marshfield Dan Connolly: "Tim really helped ease the transition after losing all of our defensemen last season. We could always count on him to make the big save. He literally won a few games for us because of he made so many outstanding saves."

Dana Unangst - Senior (Capt.)
Forward - Marshfield



Dana Unangst

A two-time Mariner All-Scholastic, Unangst was Marshfield's second-leading scorer this season, racking up 44 points on 16 goals, 28 assists...Was third overall in the Old Colony League...A two-time OCL All-star, Unangst was one of the fastest and most versatile players in the league...His consistently solid play on the Rams' frontline helped lead the team to a 12-6-5 season, which was capped in the quarterfinals of the Div. 2 South Sectional tourney...The Rams also finished third in the competitive OCL...The senior was also a forward on the MHS boys soccer team, which reached the Div. 1 South Sectional title game last fall...Unangst plans to attend college and continue his hockey career. Marshfield coach Dan Connolly: "Dana played well both offensively and defensively. He was a true leader by example. He was always the hardest working player in practice and in the games."

Mike Celestino - Senior (Capt.)
Center - Rockland

Mike Celestino

It was a Cinderella season for the Bulldogs this year and Celestino was a major reason why...A four-year varsity player, Celestino notched his 100th career point this year, finishing with close to 120 overall...Celestino led the team in scoring this season racking up 41 points...The senior was a two-time Patriot League All-star before it disbanded this season...His play on the frontline helped get the Bulldogs back to the Div. 3 South Sectional tourney for the first time in a decade...There, they dropped a heart-breaking 4-3 decision to eventual semifinalist, Somerset...Rockland finished with a 11-9-1 record, after winning just one game a year earlier...Celestino plans to attend college. Rockland coach Jim Casagrande: "This was a breakout year for Mike. It's the first time we got him with kids who compliment his talent. He has a great natural ability and is very good on skates. He's a fantastic hockey player."

Sean Kelleher - Junior
Forward - Rockland

Known as the workhorse on the Rockland hockey squad, Kelleher added new life to the Bulldogs' frontline this season...He teamed with fellow All-Scholastic Mike Celestino in creating one of the more productive lines around, with his 36 individual points...His blistering skating speed put a lot of pressure on opposing teams' defenses, making him a hard player to contain...His work on offense was instrumental in the Bulldogs' return to South Sectional tourney action, after a 10-year absence, and in their 11-9-1 record...Kelleher will return to the Bulldog roster to lead the offensive attack next season. Rockland coach Jim Casagrande: "He was the heart and soul of this team. He just never stops skating hard. He has a tremendous work ethic and is a very unselfish player. He doesn't care who gets the goal."

Jesse Ferraro - Junior (Capt.)

Jesse Ferraro

Just a junior, Ferraro was named a captain this season because of his solid leadership skills and dedication to the Hanover program...The leading scorer on the rebuilding Indians squad, Ferraro scored 32 points on 16 goals, 16 assists...After getting off to a rough start, Hanover closed the season on a tear and Ferraro was a major factor, going 5-2-1 to close the year at 8-11-1...A very strong and aggressive skater, Ferraro got Hanover off to a hot start, scoring a hat trick in the team's second game of the season...He was on the ice on all power plays...Ferraro will be back to lead the Indians offense next season...He also plays baseball at HHS. Hanover coach Jim Sylvia: "Being a captain as a junior was a big responsibility for him but he handled it very well. He's a good physical skater and has a good head on his shoulders. team. Tivnan was one of the team's greatest leaders on the ice...A very versatile player, Tivnan keyed the Indians defense, but also saw time at forward...On the offensive end, Tivnan contributed eight goals...In one of the best games of his career, Tivnan scored the game-winning goal in Hanover's win over Coyle-Cassidy in the Martha's Vineyard tourney, which helped fuel the team's 5-2-1 end-of-the-season stretch that fell just short of tourney qualification (8-11-1)...Tivnan plans to attend either the University of New Hampshire or Bates College, where he would continue his hockey career. Hanover coach Jim Sylvia: "He's a kid that just loves the game of hockey. He has a very hard shot and is a smart player. He's played a lot of roles for us, particularly on defense where we had a young group and he really brought them along."

Ryan Tivnan

Ken O'Sullivan - Senior (Capt.)
Goalie - Abington/EB

Ken O'Sullivan

A four-year starter in the net for Abington/EB, O'Sullivan recorded a stellar senior season finishing with a 1.60 goals against average in the South Shore League, good for first. Overall this season, O'Sullivan had a 2.21 gaa. His performance in the net helped lead the Green Wave to a tie with Norwell for second place in the SSL (a 7-5-1 (10-9-2 overall) and appearance in the Div. 3 South Sectional. There he held eventual Sectional finalists Bliss Hills to just two goals, less than any other team in the tourney...A physical and strong goaltender, O'Sullivan consistently forced opposing offenses to work around him. He SSL All-star plans to attend the Massachusetts College of Liberal Arts and continue his hockey career. Abington coach Tony Sullmonte: "He's great at challenging the shooter. He plays big and forces the opponent to make a good play. We've been incredibly lucky to have him."

Joe Duggan - Senior (Capt.)
Goalie - Scituate

Joe Duggan

This two-time Mariner All-Scholastic backstopped the Sailors to a 17-4-1 season and to the South Sectional semifinals...posted a 14-4-1 record, 2.21 goals against and 91.2 save percentage (42 GA/476 SOG)...posted three shutouts this season, including a 5-0 win over Hull in the first round of the state tourney...top performance of the year was a 29-save gem in a 5-3 win over perennial power Hanover...a three year starter in goal, the Sailors team MVP last season...the fifth of five Duggan brothers to star for and captain the Scituate High hockey team...also a co-captain for this season's SHS baseball team...would like to play collegiate baseball, and possibly Club hockey next year...is leaning toward majoring in law enforcement, and is eyeing a career as an environmental police officer...Mass. Maritime and Plymouth State are his top two collegiate choices. Scituate coach Mike Breen: "Joe kept us in so many games over the last few years. He was a rock. A lot of our success came because our guys had so much confidence in Joe they weren't afraid to take chances now and then."

Matt Hall - Senior (Capt.)
Center - Scituate

Matt Hall

Three-time Mariner All-Scholastic is the complete package. He's big, strong, fast and possesses top-flight hands, vision and passing ability...his 34 points (15 goals, 19 assists) placed him among the Sailors team scoring leaders for the third year in a row...led the Sailors to a 15-3-1 regular season and into the semifinals of the state tourney...was named co-team MVP with defenseman Andrew Elsmore...scored a hat trick in 7-2 win over Bellingham in Boston..."Matt's one of the premier two-way forwards in Scituate history," said head coach Mike Breen, who coached Hall in Scituate Youth Hockey and Scituate Little League all-star teams. "Because the Patriot Ledger folded and the Scituate Mariner went independent this winter, Patriot Ledger All-Scholastic (also a standout baseball player for SHS) plays hockey year round at Thayer Academy in Braintree (Class of 2003 prep school next year in the hopes of improving his chances for college hockey). Matt would like to major in criminal justice. Scituate coach Mike Breen: "Matt's a very complete hockey player. With a good year in prep school play, I definitely think he will get a look at college hockey. I think he could be a very good player in Division 2 or Club. He might even have the skills to play Division 1 good [expletive] hockey, it just what he wants."

Kyle Simpson - Senior Forward - Scituate

Kyle Simpson

[illegible] Sailors' Energizer bunny...was a dependable [illegible] three at both ends of the ice, and also managed to [illegible] on [illegible] team scoring [illegible] with 29 points (14 goals, 15 assists), respectable for [illegible] 6-foot-1, 165 pounds with sensational skating ability and a tenacious attitude...played all four years on a varsity scoring line...led the Sailors in goals scored as a junior with 12...also a standout soccer and basketball player for Scituate...Eight-year, hockey-year guard for South Shore Dynamo select hockey team (Class of 01) was a top defenseman for SHS...UMass-Boston and UMass-Dartmouth have both expressed interest, but he's considering trying to improve his college prospects by playing a year of prep school hockey or Junior Hockey...Scituate coach Mike Breen: "Kyle has made some of the most incredible plays I've ever seen in high school. I've seen him [illegible] check like crazy, beat the defense back down ice, steal the puck and [illegible] go end-to-end, shoot, and then charge around the net, come back out and grab his own rebound. He just never lets up."

John Durkin was, no doubt about it, The Go To Guy on offense for the Skippers this season.

Andrew Elsmore - Junior
Defense - Scituate

Andrew Elsmore

A gifted forward in [illegible] season play who agreed to become a [illegible] for the Sailors after [illegible] sophomore [illegible] and [illegible] emerged as one of the top blueliners on the South Shore...solidly built player who is extremely strong on his skates and almost impossible to knock off the puck...does an exceptional job at leading the break and getting the puck quickly out of his end...a big shooter and very strong in front of the net...scored two goals and six assists for the 17-4-1 Sailors...named team co-MVP with senior Matt Hall...plays hockey year round...Patriot Ledger All-Scholastic...also a standout football player for SHS...playing high school lacrosse for the first time this spring...Scituate coach Mike Breen: "A great goal gets everyone excited, but defense wins games, and Andrew was our main man on defense this year. He's just so strong in all areas. It's scary to think where we would have been without him this year."

Mike McAteer – Senior (Capt.)
Forward - Norwell

Mike McAteer

Two-time Mariner All-Scholastic selection had to change his game from goal scorer to playmaker this year...he moved from wing to center...after scoring a combined 38 goals in previous two seasons, he finished this winter with his three-year low of 14 goals, but had a team-best (by far) 19 assists to finish tied for the team scoring lead with 33 points...the Clippers were the big winners, as McAteer led them to a 13-5-2 season and a second place finish in the South Shore League...played on a scoring line all four years at NHS...two biggest high school goals were dramatic gamewinners in the state tourney, the first with three seconds left in first round win over Bishop Stang as a sophomore, the second in overtime of this year's first round win over Harwich...finished his NHS career with over 104 total points...plays hockey year round...plans to play college hockey and major in Construction Management...looking at UMass-Boston, Fitchburg State and Wentworth, but has also not ruled out first doing a year of Prep School or Junior Hockey...Norwell coach Paul Hurley: "Mike sacrificed goals for the good of the team. Some kids care more about personal stats, especially in their senior years when they're trying to get attract colleges. So I really appreciate what he did for the good of the team."

Tom Sullivan- Junior
Goalie - Norwell

Tom Sullivan

Truly an amazing story after playing goalie his entire youth hockey career, Tom moved to forward for NHS as a sophomore after he was unable to beat out incumbent Ryan O'Shaughnessy. This season, he quickly established himself as the top goaltender and went on to lead the Clippers to a record of 13-5-2, while posting a South Shore League best goals against average of 1.85 (including 1.68 in league play)...South Shore League all-star...plays hockey year round...Honor Roll student...would like to play college hockey...Norwell coach Paul Hurley: "All things considered, it was a pretty phenomenal season for Sully. Just saying it was a pleasant surprise isn't enough. He was our most consistent player this year, no doubt about that. It's scary to think where we might have been without him."

Bill Coveney - Senior (Capt.)
Defense - Braintree

Bill Coveney

Now a two-time Mariner All-Scholastic, having also earned the honor for football this fall...a prototype defensive defensemen the last two years. Coveney increased his offensive mindset this year and wound up third on the Lakers in scoring with 13 points (four goals, nine assists)...Pembroke native is a strong skater who is virtually impossible to knock off his skates with the puck... Forward - Braintree

Ryan Grant

A 4-year varsity player who finished his fabulous career with over 150 points...Bay State Conference Most Valuable Player...three-time Bay State Conference All-Star...2-time Patriot Ledger All-Star...finished this season with a team best 18 goals and 20 assists to lead Wamps to 9-7-4 season...scored 30 goals as a junior...possesses quick moves and a blistering shot... much stronger and tougher than 5-foot-9, 140-pound frame suggests...biggest goal this year was a game-tying tally with 14.6 seconds remaining against perennial power Matignon...lauded as an even better lacrosse player...led Braintree laxers in scoring last two years (69 goals, 14 assists last year) and was a Patriot Ledger All-Scholastic twice in that sport as well...is leaning more toward playing lacrosse in college...will attend a year of prep school next year in order to improve his college options...is looking at Bridgeton Academy and Salisbury...Braintree coach Dave Fasano: "Ryan means a lot to me. He's been with me all three years as head coach, and he's just a great kid as well as a great hockey player. He's the type of player who never backs down from anything. It might no be the best analogy to use at this time, but Ryan is the type of person I'd go to war with."

Sean Meany - Junior Center – Avon/Holbrook

With his 26 goals and 12 assists, Meany became the first player in A-H's six-year history to lead the Mayflower League in scoring...a well-rounded player who's strong on his skates and good around the net...has played for A-H varsity team since seventh grade...five-foot-eleven, 175 pound forward plans to hit weights in order to attract more collegiate interest next year... used to play football and baseball, but now concentrates year round on hockey...would like to play college hockey...is leaning toward playing a year of Junior Hockey after his senior year in order to attract more college interest...National Honor Society member...Avon-Holbrook coach Brian McCauley: "You see the points he gets and think offense, but he's also a good defensive player. He quarterbacks the power play. He's an all around good player, the total package. As a team, we wouldn't be the same without him."

Lacrosse Boosters coupon packet fundraiser kicks off

The Cohasset High Lacrosse Boosters are selling a packet of 32 coupons for discounted services or goods at area restaurants and shops. The retail value of the packet is $175, but the coast is just $20.

Each of the approximate 100 athletes in the Cohasset Junior and Senior High lacrosse program will be expected to sell 12 coupon packets.

The primary purpose of this ambitious fundraising effort is to assure there is sufficient money in the boosters coffers to subsidize and/or completely pay for the JV team next year. Because of huge fiscal restraints on our current and future school budgets, we recently wrote a check to the school to pay for the JV team this year—which included referee fees, bus transportation, etc.

There are numerous indications that the schools will have an even more difficult time funding this team next year. Lacrosse interest and rosters are on a steady rise in the Cohasset schools, and we feel that the JV program is a vital link to the flow of our team's success.

If a seventh grader knows that he/she will get time to play his own schedule, in their own games as opposed to standing on the side lines, freezing, and just hoping the coach will find a way to play them, this seventh grader will be more enthused to play. Obviously, there aren't many seventh-grade boys or girls who would not be daunted over the prospect of playing this game against 11th or 12th graders.

So, it is certainly our position that the JV team is very important to the safety and psyche of the athletes involved.

The varsity teams will be receiving the tickets to begin to sell on Monday, April 7, and the Middle school teams will get theirs on the 10th. As I'm sure you know, Middle school rules require that they start later, and the 10th is the first day of their practice.

We plan on selling 1,200 tickets by the end of the day on Monday the 14th between all the athletes, so it's going to be "fast, furious and fun."

Motivation prizes will be given to the athletes.

On Tuesday, April 14, at 5 p.m., we have a town-wide "blitz", with adults driving their group of athletes in uniforms to different areas of town to sell tickets that were not sold earlier in the campaign.

The following business/restaurants have been gracious to contribute: Atlantica, The Village Butcher and Deli, Papa Gino's, Chili's, Fridays, DiNero's, Red Parrot, Jiffy Lube. Without the generosity of these businesses, this undertaking would have never even started ,

We are asking our community, at these economically stressful times, to think positively about supporting these athletes. You are getting a "deal" with this ticket - spend $20 to support and you get $175 in coupons.

Boys Lax wraps up pre-season

Attack picture remains unclear

After five preseason contests, Cohasset head coach Kevin Orcutt still isn't sure how his offense will run.

"Although we outscored our opponents in four of our five scrimmages," said Orcutt, "I'm still not comfortable with our set-up. We're missing opportunities, and need to fix a few things."

Seniors Tom Anderson and Matt Davis, both of whom spent time on attack in the first two weeks, may be back at midfield by the season opener on Friday night at Scituate High School. Orcutt said the two co-captains would give Cohasset a defensive presence the team seemed to lack in the early going.

Orcutt said the new attack could include some combination of junior Mike Rasmussen and sophs Sam Steele and Jon Grimm, teamed with senior Curt Kahn, until soph Jake Previte returns from a tendonitis injury.

"We hear from Jake that he could be out for four weeks, which is surprising," said Orcutt, "but I guess he'll be back when he's ready. We'll also take a close look at the other underclass attackmen, because there's some talent there."

Orcutt said that senior Evan Pestone may be working himself into the close defense rotation, while soph Chris Simms and freshman Ben Libby continue to push junior Nick Murphy for playing time.

The Skippers will host Pilgrim rival Falmouth on Tuesday, April 8 in their second game of the season. The faceoff at Alumni Field will be at 6 p.m..

Arms struggle

Saturday field availability for makeup games, Friday has been reserved as the "makeup day."

"Our schedule will probably force us to go five deep with pitchers rather than three or four, and that could be a disadvantage for us, as well as other teams," concedes Gallotta, who grew accustomed to the Monday-Wednesday-Friday slate at Archbishop Williams. "You could have some sloppy baseball when you're forced to go that deep at the high school level.

"I guess the best we can do is hope for a lot of rainy Thursdays," he added.

On the positive side, Coach G did report he was "encouraged by the way the team swung the bat" in scrimmages, and also that he was "reasonably satisfied with the overall defense."

"I'm really not that worried about those two areas of the game," Gallotta noted. "I think we should be able to score enough to do well in our league, and our defense shouldn't hurt us."

The Skippers appear ready to open the season with senior Trey Curry at first base, Andrade at second, Snowdale at third, Dooley at short, Straughn or Downing in left (depending on pitching), McKenna in center and Baroudi in right.

Snowdale was the starting shortstop last season, but Gallotta plans to play him at third to open the season in the hopes of better preserving his highly valued right arm.

"Hopefully, this move (to third base) will put less stress on Mike's arm and help him get back on the mound sooner," noted the coach.

In the Thayer scrimmage, Coach G. employed a batting order of Andrade, McKenna, Dooley, Straughn, Snowdale, Blanco, Baroudi, Curry and Downing, and indicated that this would probably be pretty close to his opening day lineup.

Senior Matt O'Brien (catcher/first base/outfield) and sophomore Tim Pilczak (catcher/second base) started in the Duxbury game, and also could see playing time, or even possibly start, in Monday's season opener at home (Milliken Field) against SSL rival Norwell (3:30 p.m. start).

Date two on the 18-game slate has Mashpee coming to town on Tuesday (4 p.m. start). The Skippers will hit the road for the first time on Thursday, making the short trip to Hull (3:30 p.m.) to close out the first week of play.

Tracksters hit bump in road

The Rockland High boys track team got its revenge on their graduation-depleted Cohasset High rivals in Tuesday's season opener, ending the Skippers two-year unbeaten streak with a resounding 96-40 pasting.

Cohasset senior captain Ian Kidder certainly could not have done any more, as he took first place in three events, qualifying for the state meet in two of them (javelin and triple jump).

The senior also ran a leg for the winning 4x100 relay team, along with fellow senior captain Jared Krupczak, Eric Belz and Braun Goodson. This quartet also qualified for states.

The CHS girls were also overwhelmed by the deeper and more experienced Rockland team, 108-28.

Cohasset junior captain Jen Buckley, though, took first in the 2-mile run and javelin.

Men's tennis team clips first place Weymouth Club

Sparkling tennis was displayed in men's South of Boston league play last Saturday at the Cohasset Tennis & Squash club as new owner Bud Schultz edged the number 1 ranked New England Mens Open champion, Alex Howard. Schultz, formerly ranked in the top fifty in the world on the ATP circuit, broke the younger Howard's serve in second game of the third set and went on to hold serve at the buzzer. "My strategy is to serve and volley him off the court", Schultz advised team captain, Brian Hill, Sr. The very popular and congenial Alex Howard and Schultz drew a crowd of 50 to watch tennis at its highest level and opposite styles with Howard's speed and quickness versus Schultz power and net game. Both men were true gentlemen, each calling the lines with great accuracy and fairness.

At First Doubles, perennial champions John Englander and Paul Shaw came back from match point to break, hold, and break and notch a half a point for the Cohasset team in a closely contested match with Weymouth pro Tim Riley and veteran Tony Alessi.

At Second Doubles, Brian Marsden, Jr, nationally ranked junior from Hingham and Cohasset Pro Jader Moreira had no difficulty dispatching Vince Heiderbach and Dave Hamburger in straight sets.

The Cohasset win keeps them on a course to meet the same Weymouth team in the first round of the playoffs in the coming weeks. Also competing for the Cohasset team are Chum Steele, Peter Duffy, and Fred Buffum. Stay tuned for playoff updates.
